Disposed by BILL SHILEY of the Wynston Bobs

On Christmas eve, when the last gift has been wrapped, and the last stocking filled to the top, when the turkey is stuffed and ready for the oven, and the lights glow warmly in the green of the Christmas tree, sit down for a minute, you lucky people, and think about Christmas.

You're probably exhausted and irritable, after the scramble of the last few days, when there simply didn't appear to be enough hours in the day to do all the things that had to be done to prepare for the celebration of Christmas.

Somebody else, almost 2,000 years ago was exhausted, too. At the end of an arduous journey, a man was frantically seeking shelter, on a black and bitter winter night, in a miserable little town in the middle east, for himself and his wife, who was about to give birth to a baby.

Before you turn out the lights in your warm home and go up to your warm bed try to imagine what it was like: the harassed husband; the white-faced wife; their unutterable weariness and growing dismay; and the rude solution that provided the simple and beautiful story that never grows old.

And when you come down on Christmas morning and find the kids happily smashing their toys, pause for a moment, you lucky people, and give thanks that you are celebrating Christmas in your own home, with those who belong to you, in the midst of peace, plenty and love.

Give a thought, however fleeting, to the derelicts on this blessed day. The lone alcoholics who weep sentimentally but real tears, as they line up shakily for their Christmas dinner at the Mission or the Salvation Army. The lone, lost souls, by their thousands, in the mental institutions. All the poor devils of both sexes, rich or poor, good or evil, who are alone and lonely on this day.

I've spent some bad Christmases myself. There was one of drear bleakness at an air force station in North Wales. A fog as heavy as grease hung everywhere. It was bitter cold. There was nowhere to go; nothing to do, but gather in the mess and huddle about the tiny fire. Most of the types resorted to the bar, and grew increasingly melancholy and sentimental, as they dreamed aloud of other Christmases; crisp white ones in Canada; hot sunlit ones in Australia; or cosy fireplaces, hot toddy and plum duff on the benighted Isle itself.

There was another, in a German prison camp, when, after the lights went out, we lit a homemade lamp and lay in our bunks, looking at the tiny flame and talking quietly, achingly, of Christmas in Ottawa and Canberra, in Capetown and Aberdeen, in Dublin and Warsaw.

And still another, a Christmas of ghastly gaiety, soon after I was married. A young wife, newly with child, and myself newly with a shadow on my Jung, about to be separated for what I assured her was three months, she sensed was six. I expected to be nine, and turned out to be a year.

Then there was the one, when I was a kid, during the depression.
 My dad had lost his business.
 Things were grim. I was twelve or 13 and knew there was famine in the land. But I still hoped, as kids do, that there'd be something special for Christmas. Anyway, when I opened my single, nicely-wrapped Christmas present, and said how a new suit of long underwear was just what I wanted, my mother started to cry. I guess it was the look on my face.

But I've never been alone, with out friends or family, without love on Christmas Day, so I don't regret the few forlorn Christmases I've had. They serve only to highlight the good ones, and there have been many of them. I remember singing carols, five of us around the piano, with the smell of roasting turkey creeping in from the kitchen, and my Dad booming away like a bullfrog from his chair in the background.

And when we sing the same carols now, around the piano, and I see the two pairs of brown eyes shining heavenward and the little faces tilted, carolling fervently, I am content and grateful.

PRESENTATION FOR ALLENS AT MANOR XMAS PARTY

Mr. and Mrs. Stan Allen's apartment in the Halton Manor staff house was the scene of a very enjoyable party for Mr. and Mrs.
 Allen and the staff of the Manor on Wednesday evening, Dec. 12th.
 The first part of the evening was spent in dancing in the recreation room and the highlight of this activity was a certain square dance which caused much amusement.
 After the dancing, a most attractive and delicious buffet twenty supper was served to the twenty staff members present. Christmas gifts were exchanged at the Christmas tree and the staff presented Mr. and Mrs. A. with a table lamp and their daughter, Susan, with a piece of jewellery. All the staff members reported a most delightful time.
