Chatting . . .

M. H. B.

DO YOU remember months ago — we chatted about our two cats, Toots and Boots. It was all very confusing. Toots was the gentleman and Boots the lady. All my pleas that the names be changed the other way around, were ignored by the family. And then, if you recall, the cats were identical in size, colour and markings, except that Toots had a little grey patch of hair under his chin that looked for all the world like a goatee.

Both cats had come to us as strays. They were devoted to one another in what had to be a strictly brotherly and sisterly fashion. In fact, we were all quite convinced they were from the same litter and had been cast upon the cruel world to fend for themselves when only tiny kittens.

Some people around the house event hinted that Toots must be pretty stupid, or something, to hang around Boots so devotedly, when romance was out of the question as far as she was concerned. Much as I deplored the cat hairs and paw marks around the house, I must confess I enjoyed watching their antics. They played together, ate together, snoozed together, and showing affection with every lick, even washed each other's faces.

But alas and alack, Toots has either found himself another bosom pal, or has met with a fatal misfortune. At any rate, he went out one wintry night, and has never returned.

THE GIRL HE LEFT behind really misses him. How do I know? By her unaccustomed restlessness and discontent, both when inside and out. For one source of consolation she has turned to us. She was the standoffish type, remember? Now she rubs purringly against our ankles, tolerates some petting, and has even been known to jump up and snuggle down on your lap, when you least expect it. A complete change of personality.

And somewhat like a human, she has turned to another source of consolation, food. Every time she appears in the kitchen she asks for it. Goes right to the cupboard where we keep the box, and makes her wants known with a demanding barksy meow. If she were a human, psychiatrists would label her as having a complex of some kind. I'm sure, because what she wants, morning, noon and night, is the breakfast cereal "Cheerios."

We've learned she likes only a very few at one time. She prefers them to be put on the floor in a corner by the cupboard. Eating the few she fancies, she leaves the rest, then an hour or so later, is asking for more. But they have to be fresh out of the box. She refuses to touch the ones that have been sitting out for even a short time.

Cheerios have even changed the "mad chase around the house before bed" routine. Now when she hears dishes rattling in the kitchen for our midnight snack, out she comes, demands her Cheerios, and meekly allows us to lure her into her basement bed with a handful.

ANOTHER SOURCE of consolation — and I must confess this one really tries our affection close to the limit — is birds. She always was too interested in them, but now, with nothing else to take her attention, she is concentrating on them more than ever. The worst of it is, she always wants in after a successful foray. Before I notice it, she is thru' the door and into the house, carrying her prize. This is always greeted with outraged screams from the door opener, the signal for the whole family to leave whatever they are doing and chase her all over the house, corner her, and put her out in none-too-gentle fashion. After one of these episodes, none of us can bear to even look at her for the rest of the day.

I REALIZE THAT it is a cat's nature, but perhaps somebody knows of a way to curb this tendency. I'm willing to give all suggestions a try, but one. Somebody is bound to suggest that we get another cat to keep Boots company and help take her mind off birds. To which I must honestly reply that interesting and all tho' it was having two, I find that having one feline member of the family is quite enough.

GAMES NIGHT FOR HOLY CROSS GROUP
Euchre, cribbage and auction 45 were the favourite games when a Games Night was held on Monday in Holy Cross R.C. school. It was sponsored by the school auxiliary and convened by Mrs. George Mundy.

Euchre prizes were won by Mr. Gardner, Mrs. Judd Davidson, Mrs. J. Levy and Mrs. Alan Prouse. Consolation going to Jack Hughes. Mrs. C. E. Stacey was winner at cribbage and Mrs. W. H. Donnahee at auction 45. For other games Mrs. John Pignatelli was a prizewinner and Mrs. Levy also won a lucky draw for a casserole.

Lunch was served to conclude a successful event.
