Sugar and Spice

Dispensed by BILL SMILEY of the Warton Echo

I've always been a loyal citizen of the Crown, but if I could afford it, I'd take the next few weeks off and head for Hudson Bay, or any other place inaccessible to newspapers and television.

The other day, the Toronto Globe and Mail announced with pride that no less than 62 reporters, photographers and correspondents would make up its "Royal Tour team". Isn't that sickening? Add to that mob a proportionate number from the other big dailies, a vast gaggle of radio and television people, and another couple of hundred from the smaller dailies and the U.S. press, and you can see what we're in for.

Who would want to be the Queen, and be pursued across a continent by a horde of harassed, hot and hungry reporters, a rabble of rude and rambunctious photographers? Only a Queen, in a dramatic case, could be subjected to such an appalling ordeal.

On the other hand, who wants to read all that gush and garbage the scrambling press will produce? Are you interested, Mac, in perusing breathless columns about the warm, human way the Queen scratched her nose at a state dinner? Are you fascinated, Elmer, by a 1,200-word description of the Royal Yacht? Do you thrill, Buster, at the 84th fuzzy photo of Her Majesty inspecting a guard of honour?

Not me. And not Joe Dope, down the street. I'll tell you who is responsible for all this balderdash. It's the women. Don't ask me why, but from the time their Queen sets foot on Canadian soil, the women of Canada are in an irrepresible state of titillation, curiosity and near-hysteria.

They will read miles of sentimental slosh written by sob sisters of both sexes. They will exclaim with delight at hundreds of photos of Her Majesty, good, bad and indifferent. They will allow hundreds of thousands of dinners to spoil, as they sit in the living-room, gawping at the lighted box in the corner.

Forty-four thousand times they will ask their husbands if they don't think the Duke is cute, and be oblivious to the answering grunt. On eighty thousand occasions they will note with sympathy and not a little satisfaction that the Queen, poor, dear, looks tired. There was a tell-tale survey the other night, in one of the Toronto papers. The completely misleading headline stated: "Most Want To See the Queen". Beneath it were the photos of ten people, five men, five women. And beneath these were capsule comments from their statements buried in the story. Here's how they read.

The women:
1. "I'd be thrilled!"
2. "Queen means something."
3. "She should meet the people."
4. "Should see the country."
5. "Very nice to see them."

And the men:
1. "I'm not interested."
2. "Should stayover there."
3. "Too much publicity."
4. "In favour of visit!"
5. "Just a waste of money"

Digest that one, kids. All few women think it's simply grand. Four out of five men couldn't care less. And the other was probably scared of his wife. So that is why we have four or five hundred news, radio and television people falling all over each other for the next fortnight.

News editors are accessories before the fact. They know perfectly well that the only things women read in their papers are the crime stories, the classifieds, and the clothing ads. But every time there's a Royal Tour, they think it's a chance to get the women reading all through the paper, and they cater to them. During the Tour, their circulation leaps, and the editors' ulcers ease.

But the minute it's over, the women drop the newspapers like a soiled diaper, and go back to reading cake mix recipes and magazine quizzes on "Is Your Husband the Right Man?", listening to soap operas, and watching third-rate TV programmes.

Never mind, girls. Far be it from me to spoil your fun. I don't understand it, but I won't interfere. I just want you to know that after the Queen waves that last goodbye, and you've wiped your eyes, you'll be welcome back, and we'll be here, maybe not as dashing as the Duke, but four-square, faithful, and ready for a decent dinner after all those weeks of eating snacks in a welter of newspapers.
