Hi People!
I took an excursion to a classy Chinese restaurant to sample a few oriental dishes, and it turned into an embarrassing adventure. The first setback was when I had to have the waiter translate most of the menu to me.
My big mistake was going to get a package of cigarettes and letting my female friend order. So, most of the people in China are peasants, and maybe the country is poor, but their food sure is expensive! They, when the food came, I was presented with a knife and fork. If they had given me chopsticks, I would have starved to death while getting the things to work properly.

Then I really started to sweat between Canada and China when I called the waiter "gar con" (General de Gaulle). I apologize to you, also!
After we had eaten and were paying our bill, I remembered that I'd forgotten to bring my Chinese money along with me, but they graciously accepted Canadian tender instead.
Then I really put my foot in it when I bowed before leaving. Before you could say "Charlie Chan" someone hit me over the head with a pot of Jasmine tea, and I was carried to the parking lot and thrown into my rickshaw. My wrist cart had broken severely with a bag of fortune cookies.
My advice to you is never to bow in a Chinese restaurant unless you can run like a deer.
This Friday night will be dancing to the "Top Forty" and laughing at the jokes that they tell in the corner. We'll be there Friday night, and we'll be looking for you.
