

What About Technical and Trade Schools?

"The growing need for more technical and trade schools is being... recognized by school authorities... throughout the country."

This is the opening sentence in Sun Life's booklet, "What About Technical and Trade Schools?" which goes on to describe the increased financial returns and social acceptance of today's skilled labour class and which was designed to help the younger who is trying to plan for his future.

"What About Technical and Trade Schools?" and other brochures in the Values in Education series, offered as a public service by Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada, are available without charge or obligation from local agents.

Diary of a Vagabond

BY DOROTHY BARKER

There are two supreme moments in every journey. One is when a Red Cap deposits your luggage in one of those ultra-modern train compartments and you experience a delightful sensation of adventure as the train starts to slowly pull away from the platform. The other is that most exciting moment when you step down at the railroad station on your return, expecting to be met by the entire family.

I walked down the long ramp into the marble vaulted foyer at Toronto, scanned the long brass rail (draped solidly with gaily-clothed strangers) which separates friends and relatives from incoming passengers but I couldn't spot a single familiar face.

There is a helpless feeling about being stranded in a railway station with luggage, a portable typewriter, a pair of glasses and an armful of paperback novels and magazines. Especially when there had been an unexpected rise in temperature and there is barely enough change in hand to make a telephone call. Somewhere along the route I had cashed my last traveller's cheque for meals.

I am sure that being stranded on a desert island couldn't present any more problems than I seemed to face that sunny Monday morning. I went over in my mind a dozen times the wording of my telegram anouncing my return. I am met jealous about such matters. I was sure I had not made any mistake in time or place.

As women do, I began to think of all the disastrous things that could have happened to delay the family. Were the children ill? Had the house burned down? Maybe the car wouldn't start?

There was only one thing to do. Sit it out and if I were really abandoned, I could call the home town taxi where my credit is good.

I deposited my perspiring self, my train case, typewriter, jacket and magazines on one of those long, shiny oak benches familiar to all travellers and resigned myself to wait patiently until rescued.

I decided that if one must be deserted a good spot to choose is a station. They are wonderful places of amusement and can provide such a vivid cross section of humanity that time seems suspended.

I watched the shop girls and young steers arriving by commuter trains, each with a huge purse and a small paper bag. The latter, I decided, contained lunch. With bored-looking youths, they headed for the subway tunnel in hurrying dashes. A plump, oily poly sort of woman bought a cup of coffee and a true romance magazine at the coffee bar and sat beside me while she nibbled a doughnut and devoured a torrid tale of romance. This was obviously her regular breakfast diet and was consumed with apparent relish amid the noise and confusion of several thousand foot steps.

A small hand tugged at my skirt and a little fellow in old fashioned knickers and a peaked cap pointed to a contraption at the end of the bench. In a volume of chatter that sounded like a mixture of Pidgin English and a string of Latin verbs he made me understand he wanted to experiment with the machine that challenges passersby to try their driving skill. I deposited a dime and he was away. Not once, but twice, on a wild ride that lit up all the red lights and registered "reckless driver." I was about to drop my last means of telephone communication into the machine's coin slot when an army of immigrants, laden with carpet bags and armfuls of ham-bins rescued me from my folly.

They swept the youngster away just as they were enthusiastically greeted by what appeared to be the entire Italian population of Toronto.

While I was contemplating my last ten cent piece and wondering whether I should gamble on my rescue and spend it on a cup of coffee, I heard the shrill welcome of the three bairns. Susan was waving her latest art creation, a horse being kissed by a butterfly and looking more like a prehistoric mastodon; Janet hugging a limp, furless stuffed kitten and Ri-
