

Georgetown Herald

A THOMPSON NEWSPAPERS LIMITED PUBLICATION

Serving the communities of Georgetown, Glen Williams, Norval, Limerhouse, Hornby, Stewarttown, Ballinafad, Astrgrove, Terra Cotta.

Page 4 Thursday Evening, August 11th, 1960

Suggest Remembrance Change

Each year when we attend a remembrance service in November, we wonder if a change in date to a time of year when weather is milder would not be wise.

Years back, when remembrance day was strictly an observance of the end of the first war, November 11th was particularly significant and any change would have had a natural opposition. But now days with the day set aside to mark ending of two world wars and the Korean conflict, it is with more emphasis on remembering those who gave their lives to battle rather than the end of hostilities, we think a majority of people would welcome setting the date in months when our Canadian weather is more favourable to outdoor air meetings.

Perhaps a few appeals to the minister might be investigated by the government.

A national day of remembrance could be set in one of the warmer months, celebrating that day to services at cemeteries and burial grounds and to refreshment on the terrace instead of war and just lives and the end of hostilities.

For the majority of people, the end of hostilities is not the end of the war. It is the end of the suffering and the end of the suffering.

Building Slack Is Noted.....

A slackening off in building activity is noted in figures published last week by the Department of Statistics. In the first seven months of this year...

Only seven building permits were issued in the first seven months of this year, compared with 147 in the same period last year.

Major industrial and commercial construction this year is limited to the new Graham Bell plant and the new Baptist Church, totaling $2,000,000. Last year, over half a million dollars was invested in these seven months in projects for James Market Centre, office buildings for Lewis Developments and Carleton, and an addition to the Smith & Stone plant.

Figures would seem to show a transition

Everyone Can Help.....

While assessment will not be increasing too rapidly this year, costs in many ways stand still, and in a period of inflationary tendencies, taxes will result in an upward spiral. It is necessary to assess value to provide more tax money for the town treasury.

It is not sufficient for the average citizen to say "let the council do the job." The Council Commission, the chairman of the council, bring more ideas into the council.

Certainly these groups are doing everything in their power to assist the town economy. But there are places where the citizen can help too. And there is no better start than to be a teacher for Georgetown and everything that is in it.

Perhaps we have all been too prone to dwell on problems which obscure the even trend of small town life, instead of looking on the bright side of our growth.

DISTRICT NEWS at a Glance

BURLINGTON

Construction of a Chedoke Expressway to provide a seven minute link between Burlington and downtown Hamilton will start in the fall. Department of Highways officials said the work.

OAKVILLE

Pullout of the Section 34 water trough at the present of project from the Oakville-Trafalgar Recreation Committee at Tuesday evening meeting. The cost of the trough at Park Ridge Park, has been set at $100,000 and will have a 254,000 gallon capacity.

STREETSVILLE

Construction of a 100-foot high water tower at a site in Streetville. The present plans are approved by Council. The tower will cost $30,000 and will have a 254,000 gallon capacity.

BRAMPTON

Four-year-old Glenn Savage found that all cats were not as friendly as his Ginger. Forty-three stitches were needed to close cuts and deep scratches inflicted by the boy after he had been mauled by a cat.

MILTON

Milton Safety Council will study blind corners, hazards, and the lack of signs in certain areas before presenting a report. They also urged travelling townspeople to send in suggestions on a good sign for the town entrance, incorporating a picture or word slogan used for safety in other towns.

ORANGEVILLE

Another step was taken last week in plans to provide an 11-unit housing

Liberals Appoint Executive Director

Appointments of Bruce Power as executive director of the Ontario Liberal Association has been announced in a joint statement by Ontario Liberal leader John Winter, member and Association president Royce Erith.

ACTON

Disregarding a recommendation from Ontario Hydro to provide an annual remuneration to a commissioner, Acton Hydro Commission decided to give their services in administering hydro business free of charge for the year 1960 at least. This action was taken at their regular meeting Thursday July 28.

STREETSVILLE JERSEY GETS TON OF GOLD

In the heavy herd of Belburn Streetville, Ont. the 1960 W-4000 Jersey Award has just been issued a Ton of Gold certificate in 1461 days. The cow produced 2,172 lbs of fat. To qualify for this award a cow must produce at least 2,000 lbs of fat in 4 consecutive years.

Georgetown Herald

Published by Thomson Newspapers Limited, Georgetown, Ontario.
Walter C. Blaho, Managing Editor
Garfield L. McGillivray, Production Superintendent
Office Staff:
Aileen Bradley, Terry Harley, John Olivier, Advertising
Plant Staff:
I. M. Clark, Dave Hastings, B. Baskerville, Myles Gilson, Bob MacArthur

Member of the Canadian Weekly Newspapers Association and the Ontario Division of the C.W.N.A.

Liberal Party Appoints Executive Director

Appointments of Bruce Power as executive director of the Ontario Liberal Association has been announced in a joint statement by Ontario Liberal leader John Winter, member and Association president Royce Erith.

Mr. Power succeeds James Scott who was transferred to Ottawa last November as the party's national director of organization.

He will take charge of the Liberal Association headquarters in Toronto and will be responsible for party organization locally and provincially in Ontario. His next immediate task will be organizing for the forthcoming federal bye-elections in Peterborough and Niagara Falls, ridings, and the provincial by-elections in Simcoe Centre and Temuskaming ridings.

Mr. Power is a graduate of the University of Alberta, with an MA in economics. He was private secretary to George Prud'homme, Minister of Mines in the St. Laurent government. During the federal campaign in 1952 and 1957 he assisted in Liberal Party organization in Alberta. For the past three years he has been with the public relations department of Imperial Oil Ltd., based in Toronto.

In the 1950 University of Toronto fund raising drive he was the secretary of the public information committee.

TOWN REUNITED

A bawley bridge reunited east and west sections of Cheltenham for the first time since a transport collapsed an old iron span four weeks before.

The temporary bridge was eased into place over the Credit to serve until such time as a new bridge can be erected.

THE PART OUT OF THE JUNGLE

Controversial Corner

by Ian Cass

Of Course I'm Not Prejudiced... But...

We are all familiar with the saying, "To judge of a man, look at his friends." The author of the book "The Part Out of the Jungle" is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

Tribe Instinct

It is a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

It is a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

It is a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

It is a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

It is a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

It is a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

It is a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

It is a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

It is a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

It is a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

It is a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

It is a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

It is a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

It is a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

It is a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

It is a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

It is a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

It is a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

It is a very interesting and controversial life. He is a man who has a very interesting and controversial life.

Sugar and Spice

Disseminated by HILL SMILEY of the Waterloo Echo

Most of us who are taking the special summer crash course for fledgling high school teachers are finding it pretty strong meat. It's especially invigorating for refugees from other fields, like myself, whose peak of intellectual exercise in the past decade or so, has been working out a crossword puzzle or watching the late, late movie.

So you get up there in front of the class, lesson notes fluttering hysterically in your hand, sweat running down your spine. A strange, trembling voice tells the class to turn to page eleven-seven. You open your mouth again to begin teaching, and your mind goes blank.

Thus, we have former insurance salesman laboring over Latin. We have men who were in the retail business anguished over algebra.

We have married women who have learned nothing since they left college, except how to run a lot of push-button kitchen machinery, and how to get the geography of Africa.

But every second week, the pressure of study is relieved. As a special treat, we are allowed to play a game. At one time it was known as Daniel in the Lions' Den. Later, it turned up as the Spanish Inquisition. Now it is simply called Practice Teaching.

A week of this can shorten your life by ten years. What is a little hard on middle-aged types who are already worried about being able to hang on until they get the super-annuation, some 30 years hence. A friend of mine on the course suddenly crumpled the other day. We rushed him to the emergency department of the General Hospital.

They gave him about 37 tests of various kinds. They asked him a lot of questions. He kept throwing up and complaining of pain. Finally, they told him rather vaguely that he had a virus, gave him a prescription for some expensive medicine, and told him to go to bed for a few days.

I don't worry about the student teachers who are just out of college. They're almost as cackly as the teenagers themselves. It's the older types, on the comeback trail, sporting the wounds of the years bravely, who wring your heart. You feel like saying, "There, there, old boy. I promise we'll send you back home, to the good old boring job you left for the glitter of teaching, on the first train, as soon as you come out of 'back'." And to the girls: "Never mind, Mum. I'll bet you're a darn good cook, anyway."

There is a hilarious logic to the practice-teaching sessions. If you're going to be teaching Commercial in September, your first practice-teaching assignment will be a lesson in Grade 12 French. If you are teaching nothing but English this fall, you are likely to be tossed in front of a class in Grade 11 Geography, which you last studied about the time Mussolini was shouting from a balcony.

This element of suspense adds a great deal to the game, giving it a distinct flavour of that old parlour pastime, Russian Roulette. It has one of two results. Either it imbues the student teacher with unwarranted confidence, or it makes him for life.

As you go through the lessons with all the enthusiasm and spontaneity of a gambler, your inner mind chortles, "What am I doing here? I never wanted to be a teacher anyway. They talked me into it. Who can possibly stand teenagers at day? I'll go mad. I want to go home to Mom and the kids. Help!"

Oh, I tell you, it makes your heart bleed to see some poor devil who used to be the confident president of the Rotary Club back home, standing there, craven grey, preparing. It almost makes the tears start when you see some girl, happily married for nine years, who had asked her way up to District President of the Women's Institute in the home town, up there with her knees knocking, mouth twitching. It shouldn't happen to Lumbumb.

I don't worry about the student teachers who are just out of college. They're almost as cackly as the teenagers themselves. It's the older types, on the comeback trail, sporting the wounds of the years bravely, who wring your heart. You feel like saying, "There, there, old boy. I promise we'll send you back home, to the good old boring job you left for the glitter of teaching, on the first train, as soon as you come out of 'back'." And to the girls: "Never mind, Mum. I'll bet you're a darn good cook, anyway."

There is a hilarious logic to the practice-teaching sessions. If you're going to be teaching Commercial in September, your first practice-teaching assignment will be a lesson in Grade 12 French. If you are teaching nothing but English this fall, you are likely to be tossed in front of a class in Grade 11 Geography, which you last studied about the time Mussolini was shouting from a balcony.

This element of suspense adds a great deal to the game, giving it a distinct flavour of that old parlour pastime, Russian Roulette. It has one of two results. Either it imbues the student teacher with unwarranted confidence, or it makes him for life.

As you go through the lessons with all the enthusiasm and spontaneity of a gambler, your inner mind chortles, "What am I doing here? I never wanted to be a teacher anyway. They talked me into it. Who can possibly stand teenagers at day? I'll go mad. I want to go home to Mom and the kids. Help!"

Oh, I tell you, it makes your heart bleed to see some poor devil who used to be the confident president of the Rotary Club back home, standing there, craven grey, preparing. It almost makes the tears start when you see some girl, happily married for nine years, who had asked her way up to District President of the Women's Institute in the home town, up there with her knees knocking, mouth twitching. It shouldn't happen to Lumbumb.

I don't worry about the student teachers who are just out of college. They're almost as cackly as the teenagers themselves. It's the older types, on the comeback trail, sporting the wounds of the years bravely, who wring your heart. You feel like saying, "There, there, old boy. I promise we'll send you back home, to the good old boring job you left for the glitter of teaching, on the first train, as soon as you come out of 'back'." And to the girls: "Never mind, Mum. I'll bet you're a darn good cook, anyway."

There is a hilarious logic to the practice-teaching sessions. If you're going to be teaching Commercial in September, your first practice-teaching assignment will be a lesson in Grade 12 French. If you are teaching nothing but English this fall, you are likely to be tossed in front of a class in Grade 11 Geography, which you last studied about the time Mussolini was shouting from a balcony.

This element of suspense adds a great deal to the game, giving it a distinct flavour of that old parlour pastime, Russian Roulette. It has one of two results. Either it imbues the student teacher with unwarranted confidence, or it makes him for life.

As you go through the lessons with all the enthusiasm and spontaneity of a gambler, your inner mind chortles, "What am I doing here? I never wanted to be a teacher anyway. They talked me into it. Who can possibly stand teenagers at day? I'll go mad. I want to go home to Mom and the kids. Help!"

Oh, I tell you, it makes your heart bleed to see some poor devil who used to be the confident president of the Rotary Club back home, standing there, craven grey, preparing. It almost makes the tears start when you see some girl, happily married for nine years, who had asked her way up to District President of the Women's Institute in the home town, up there with her knees knocking, mouth twitching. It shouldn't happen to Lumbumb.

I don't worry about the student teachers who are just out of college. They're almost as cackly as the teenagers themselves. It's the older types, on the comeback trail, sporting the wounds of the years bravely, who wring your heart. You feel like saying, "There, there, old boy. I promise we'll send you back home, to the good old boring job you left for the glitter of teaching, on the first train, as soon as you come out of 'back'." And to the girls: "Never mind, Mum. I'll bet you're a darn good cook, anyway."

There is a hilarious logic to the practice-teaching sessions. If you're going to be teaching Commercial in September, your first practice-teaching assignment will be a lesson in Grade 12 French. If you are teaching nothing but English this fall, you are likely to be tossed in front of a class in Grade 11 Geography, which you last studied about the time Mussolini was shouting from a balcony.

This element of suspense adds a great deal to the game, giving it a distinct flavour of that old parlour pastime, Russian Roulette. It has one of two results. Either it imbues the student teacher with unwarranted confidence, or it makes him for life.

As you go through the lessons with all the enthusiasm and spontaneity of a gambler, your inner mind chortles, "What am I doing here? I never wanted to be a teacher anyway. They talked me into it. Who can possibly stand teenagers at day? I'll go mad. I want to go home to Mom and the kids. Help!"

Oh, I tell you, it makes your heart bleed to see some poor devil who used to be the confident president of the Rotary Club back home, standing there, craven grey, preparing. It almost makes the tears start when you see some girl, happily married for nine years, who had asked her way up to District President of the Women's Institute in the home town, up there with her knees knocking, mouth twitching. It shouldn't happen to Lumbumb.

I don't worry about the student teachers who are just out of college. They're almost as cackly as the teenagers themselves. It's the older types, on the comeback trail, sporting the wounds of the years bravely, who wring your heart. You feel like saying, "There, there, old boy. I promise we'll send you back home, to the good old boring job you left for the glitter of teaching, on the first train, as soon as you come out of 'back'." And to the girls: "Never mind, Mum. I'll bet you're a darn good cook, anyway."

There is a hilarious logic to the practice-teaching sessions. If you're going to be teaching Commercial in September, your first practice-teaching assignment will be a lesson in Grade 12 French. If you are teaching nothing but English this fall, you are likely to be tossed in front of a class in Grade 11 Geography, which you last studied about the time Mussolini was shouting from a balcony.