

A Mirror of the Community

A newspaper is the mirror of the community it serves. It reflects the good and the bad. In short, it can only report the news, it cannot create news.

Because this is true, some of the same names and faces appear repeatedly in its columns. They appear because they are the people who make the news, who lead and do the work that makes the news.

Many of the faces that appear in a newspaper are those of people who are appointed or appointed to positions of leadership in the community, and whose actions are reported in every community, and whose actions are to participate (do the work) in the activities of these groups that make news.

These are the people who are missing from a newspaper's news columns week after week. That is not the news, however, that an editor would like to have EVERYONE's name in the paper EVERY WEEK.

It is the news that is missing that makes the newspaper a mirror of the community. It is the news that is missing that makes the newspaper a mirror of the community. It is the news that is missing that makes the newspaper a mirror of the community.

THE LAST HORSE

After a long and arduous journey, I have reached the end of my journey. I have reached the end of my journey. I have reached the end of my journey.

I have reached the end of my journey. I have reached the end of my journey. I have reached the end of my journey.

I have reached the end of my journey. I have reached the end of my journey. I have reached the end of my journey.

I have reached the end of my journey. I have reached the end of my journey. I have reached the end of my journey.

I have reached the end of my journey. I have reached the end of my journey. I have reached the end of my journey.

Sugar and Spice

Dispersed by BILL SMITH

Well, sir, we moved last week. And the next time I have to be moved, I hope it's in a hearse.

When the movers were giving us an estimate, they asked my wife how many cartons we'd have, besides the furniture and all the usual stuff.

We had something like 34 cartons, ranging from things the size of a shoebox to vast cardboard edifices which must have housed prefab homes.

I still don't know how it was possible for four ordinary humans in a few years to accumulate so much under the heading of miscellaneous.

The sorry note about this junk we lugged more than 100 miles was that it was the bare residue for a week before we moved.

Perhaps we'd have been all right if we'd let the old car throw out everything we wanted to. But the car wouldn't have watched her like a hawk.

Young Hugh was the only one who showed any real interest in the big move. He gathered together several hundred comic books from all over the house.

I planned to get on a good thing and filled two large cartons with used pocket books. But I couldn't find any more.

Those movers were right on the ball. They were supposed to arrive at noon on moving day.

It was only the personalities of the two men on the moving van that saved the day.

During the scramble of packing, I stabbed my wife in the back of the hand with the scissors.

SPECTACULAR GARDENS

The Hanging Gardens of Babylon, part of Nebuchadnezzar's magnificent palace, were artificial terraces, luxuriantly planted, supported on tiers of arches.

The book of Knowledge relates how the water for these gardens was raised from the river a height of 75 feet by an ingenious pumping system.
