Diary of a Vagabond

BY DOROTHY BARKER

Three weather-beaten prospectors made the acquaintance of Josiah Minthamer. I found him between the pages of a mine novel.

Sitting around an old pot-bellied stove they ruminated over what they should call the rich strike they had just struck in the wilderness of northern Manitoba. Tomhams adventures, after he dug a hole in the earth and found a new world appealed to them as depicting their own good fortune. So they shortened his name clature to Elm Flon which has stuck to one of the richest mineral fields in Canada.

It is now a community of 12,000 souls with two daily newspapers, nine schools and spectacular red mine shafts visual evidence of the great wealth that has been dug from the earth. The towns life expectancy has run in several cycles of ten years. Mines peter out and new bodies are discovered fortunes have been made and as many lost in the fluctuation known as "prospectors luck." Now the town has settled into a pattern of permanency as modern methods have improved mining facilities. Even the mounds of slag are being reprocessed extending the production of zinc and copper mines.

On the morning the CNR's Churchill Excursion trains pulled their seventeen coaches into a suddenly little pools of water reflected the intense blue of a northern sky. It had been raining since dawn, but the last drop we were to see until the train returned to Winnipeg fell as we walked up the long main street on a tour of inspection.

Flat-fronted one-story wood en shop leaned sometimes at crazy angles seemingly supporting one another, while the near by Hudson's Bay Company was remodelling its premises with stone and brick. Every structure in Elm Flon is built atop solid rock. Few houses or stores have basements and most buildings perch precariously on their rocky ledges, easy prey for the gales that blow during the long winter months.

I was on the hunt for a genuine sourdough and thought I had discovered him when I spied an old character smoking a huge stogie and with an oversized, weather old Stetson hanging on his ears. His almost sightless blue eyes toothless grin, Old Bill mustache and leathery tanned skin had all the earmarks of my mental picture of what a sourdough should look like. Smokey Joe was pleased with the nickname I gave him, but soon disillusioned me about his prospecting history. He was a horse trader in his youth. Horse flesh in the bush during the early part of the century was as valuable as gold nuggets. Old Joe prospered until the population became mobile on four wheels. His only similarity to that of a prospector was his ability to cook. When hard times hit his pocketbook, Smokey Joe set up a kitchen in a small store and started frying doughnuts. Today his son, who took the business over after the war, has built it into a small empire of soft drink concessions and sweet buns throughout the mining district.

This was a plenly day on the tour. Truckloads of food and dining car crew members passed the buses that transported us from Elm Flon to nearby Beaver Lake, the only point in Saskatchewan we

ONLY HELP

The jet pilot was in trouble. "Pilot to tower. Pilot to tower," he radioed frantically. "Elevating altitude. Now at 5,000 feet and out of gas. Please radio instructions."

"Tower to pilot. Tower to pilot," came the answer. "Repeat after me. 'Our Father who art in heaven . . .'"
