Beautiful New Park

Efforts of the town council and the works staff in creating a new Memorial Park will certainly be appreciated by those interested in making Georgetown a more beautiful town.

Good News in Sight

An industry which for many months has been interested in creating more space to be at the point of development and investment in our towns we are happy that Georgetown will get the nod soon.

Pleasant Recreation

Members of the lawn bowling club will be appealing again next spring for new members to join the club. They feel that many more have the mistaken idea that lawn bowling is for older people.

Some Safety Tips For Hunting Season

- Know and Observe Hunting Regulations. A summary of Ontario Hunting Regulations can be obtained at any office issuing gun and hunting licenses or by writing to the Department of Lands and Forests, Parliament Buildings, Toronto, Ontario.

who regret the removal from its more public location on the highway, but it was a move which had to be, for each year more difficulties presented themselves at this busy spot for public gatherings.

The new park has the advantage of being centrally located, yet off a heavy traffic route. And for the first time in many years, the developments are being put with a small stream, after some planning and a small revenue which will be used for the park's maintenance.

densely populated market served land for sale, a happy, progressive town of getting citizens.

Not all efforts have been in vain. Four small industries have located in town in the past few years. The current one, if it materializes will be somewhat larger and may be just the impetus that is needed to start the industrial base rolling.

Meanwhile, every Georgetown resident should continue to be on the look out and pass on any tips to members of the Municipal Commission.

Bowling is one of the most pleasant summer sports. Besides the comradeship of the local green, there are many tournaments in other towns to which members are invited. Outside the game is cheap too. Only $10 for a new bowler and $20 for experienced men.

Any man who wants to be interested in getting in touch with one of the club's executive. There is room on the greens for several more bowlers this summer. And this is the warmest welcome by those who belong.

major causes of accidents

Clothing. Take care that your clothing makes it extremely difficult for other hunters to mistake you for game. Fluorescent orange or neon red are the safest colors in the bush. A safety vest made of one of these colors is the best protection when worn over a hunting jacket.

Lost. The first rule is do not panic. Keep a cool head and stay where you are. Take three shots in quick succession, this is the SOS of the hunter. Repeat the signal at half hour intervals. Anyone hearing this signal should stop with three rapid shots. Build a fire in a safe place, keep warm and dry, and wait for someone to find you.

Gun Safety in the Home. Fatal accidents happen in the home through careless storage. Be sure the magazine and chamber is empty. Put the gun in one place and the ammunition in another. This prevents a child or anyone unfamiliar with guns from having easy access to gun and ammunition at the same time.

Controversial Corner

A Busy Week in Canada

Montreal

Mr. Jean Drapeau and his Civic Party won a resounding victory in the municipal election on October 25th. Mr. Drapeau received almost two votes in one over his opponent, Sacha Houder in the run for mayor.

The resounding victory for the Civic Party appears to indicate a return to more stable government for Montreal. It is also indicative of the general reversion of voters in the province of Quebec against rampant political corruption, party patronage and general dishonesty in public affairs.

York Township

I wonder whether or not the voters of York township will show the same rebellious attitude at their municipal election. The present reeve, Christopher Tonks has recently announced his determination to stand again for office.

Can voters expect in political affairs at the lower level, what standards and code of ethics can be expected of spurious minor politicians. According to Mr. Tonks and his supporters you can expect a pretty low standard. The forthcoming election in York Township will show who is right.

London, England

The end of a great newspaper in Canada is being heralded with little impact here. The fact that the News Chronicle and Evening Star had been bought out by Associated Newspapers (Daily Mail, etc.) did not cause much consternation in Canada.

The News Chronicle started life as the Daily News under the editorship of Charles Dickens. It is therefore, only natural that the paper from its inception adopted and supported a policy of liberalism at a time when Liberalism was revolutionary and desperately important.

It finally folded because the rising cost of paper (1000 per cent over present) and decreasing revenue from advertising made it impossible to continue.

The conference between government leaders and representatives of business, labour and management has just ended. Government action seems to be confined to one major edifice and one minor distraction. Increased tax and duty valuations on European car imports may satisfy Canadians who cannot see the need for the taxes.

The earthquake which shook most of Canada early last Friday was felt quite distinctly in Georgetown. It was much more severe than the one felt here a few years ago.

Average wheat yield on western Canada's summer fallow land in 1959 was 19.4 bushels per acre against 11.8 bushels on stubble lands.

Sugar and Spice

Discovered by BILL KELLY

If you can't give the old lady a milk coat this year, next best thing to ginger her up is a night on the town.

The road is easy. You needn't get a cheque for theatre tickets. The amount would have put a down payment on a small home in the post-war period.

Naturally, your wife hasn't a stitch to wear.

If you will do you no good to 'Combie' the matter with that black dress. It's hard to get a seat in the house. The old lady of the house is not only two years old, but it's the wrong shape, the wrong length, and even the wrong shade of black.

Then you make plans for disposing of the children for the night. They're practically blueprints by the time you're finished, and it would take Napoleon himself to read them. And you stream off to the city, leaving the electric stove on 'low' the light on in the cellar and the old girl new gloves on top of the refrigerator.

We made one of our infrequent dashes into the bright lights recently, and, as usual, emerged like a couple of slightly singed moths, dazzled, delighted, and determined to do it again at the first opportunity, which will probably be about 1962.

Every time we arrange for a big night in the city we plan to dawdle, live graciously, wine with our dinner by candle light, and arrive at the theatre calm, composed, and with that pose and hauteur typical of the seasoned theatre-goer.

It never turns out that way. We don't dawdle, we hurry. We barrel down the highway as though we were in the Grand Prix de Monaco. Scramble for a parking place. Sprint to the Press Club. Choke down a Scotch. Run to a restaurant. Gobble our dinner. Dash to the theatre. And gallop down the aisle just as the lights are going down for the third time.

I have to battle a massive desire to fall sound asleep. Our last jaunt was no exception. But it's worth the effort, the money, and the nervous strain to get out of the rut once in a while and live in the style in which you'd be living all the time if your grandfather had had some sense, and had loaned a section to the middle of the Ladies of Melts, instead of letting for that stony patch in Upper Canada.

We had tickets for the new musical, Camelot, which was having its final night in that now hazy hall in Toronto, built by that brave with the Irish name. You know, that place is hard to get a seat in these days. The staid bourgeois of Toronto are delighted with their new culture centre, which many of them fought to hard to keep out of the city, because of its unholy connection.

The O'Keefe Centre alone is worth a trip. I'll bet they could charge three dollars a seat just to go in and look around, and if for an hour or so, if they served refreshments. It's huge, its opulent and its splendid facilities are bound to attract superior entertainment to Toronto.

As for Camelot, don't regret if too much if you missed it. I enjoyed it thoroughly. But only because I am delighted by anything presented on a stage, from Sunday School Christmas concert to the variety show, all local talent, on the last night of the fall fair.

The new musical by the producers of the fabulous My Fair Lady is big and it's beautiful. But garish, costume and striking sets can make up for uninspired music and a muddy story which begins as a sprightly comedy and peters into a pallid tragic tragedy reduct of the soap opera. I predict the Broadway critics will have the howls of its producers.

However, that's their worry. I have enough troubles of my own. My leg is black and blue where my wife kept pinching me to keep me awake on the long, cold, dreary drive home. And she's still sore as blazes because the handy time to finish the lobster dinner she tackled just about the time we should have been heading for the theatre.

Thoughts on The New Cruiser

By the time this has been printed, the town may have taken delivery of its new police cruiser. Its appearance may well put smiles on our faces.

One is the colour, colourless black of the standard police cruiser, one is the picture of darkness and despair. Instead we will have one of a shiny golden yellow, which will be like a super sun to us every time we look at it.

Every time the new cruiser starts anling across the road and catches a glimpse of the new contract on he will quickly retract his stare and eyes properly. No more sunburn.

When the look out shouts, 'Grab the lot and get gone' the young constable has just founded the old moment 'oper' then we will realize that people are taking notice of our colourful addition to the police department.

Yours truly, Ed. A. Peters
