Diary of a Vagabond

BY DOROTHY BARKER

Indeed I felt mighty like a blade of grass, as the Bible says of man's years as I turned over and over the bones of an ancient dinosaur and bits of petrified wood. Mrs. Robinson, who is in charge of the Drumheller Museum, gave me these 100 million year old relics to take home. She was interested at once when I told her about my miniature indoor rock garden, where I have placed small rocks and some plants from all parts of Canada. These I have collected during my vagabonding. They make my tales sound even more exciting as big eyed grandchild ren linger the fossils.

Our youngsters were enthralled when I told them about the "Public Traps," a club of young fossil hunters organized by Mrs. Irene McVeigh. These children have contributed some of the most interesting items in the museum; their sharp eyes have found them in surrounding hills.

Dr. W. R. Head, president of the Drumheller and District Museum Society, provided me with most of the historical data regarding the discovery of the first dinosaur in the Red Deer River Valley. In the Drumheller Rotary Clubs of metal bulletins he wrote, "This honour definitely goes to Joseph Burr Tyrrell, one of Canada's most noted geologists. At the age of 27 he was appointed head of an important Dominion expedition investigating that portion of the North West Territories lying north of Calgary and east of the Rocky Mountains. Arriving at Calgary in 1884, he bought a lumberyard and provided me with five horses, a canvas boat, tent, blankets and a supply of food, guns and ammunition, set forth on May 30th. On June 9th, 1884 while inspecting some coal seams on the Red Deer River he discovered the first dinosaur bones reported in this vicinity by a white man.

"The next day, going down river, he found more dinosaur bones, mostly on steep hillsides east of the river, a short distance above the point where Kneehill Creek enters the Red Deer. From his diary of June 12th it appears that while passing the site of the present Drumheller he landed on the north side, examined and measured seams of coal outcropping there. This was the first time a white man had found coal at that place.

"On a subsequent trip to Kneehill Creek he found the complete skull of a dinosaur in an excellent state of preservation at an elevation of 40-80 feet above the creek. With this and other bones he started for Calgary. In a drizzling rain, the horses could barely pull the wagon, and the bones were packed in prairie level on the backs of horses. It took him a week to reach Calgary. It was while searching for these dinosaurs that Tyrrell one evening rode to within 100 yards of a herd of buffalo grazing in a little valley by a creek, probably the last herd that came north into Canadian territory. From Calgary the dinosaur specimens were shipped to Philadelphia for examination. Later in the same year he explored Borry Creek and the Bar-

How could such attractions, so easily accessible by rail, fail to lure tourists when so many persons are constantly contributing to the promotion of the district?

By the way of fact, but it can be very relaxing and restful. How at all cheap going to the coast, a little before the end of the year. You'll enjoy it so much.
