COSTLY FUR

The sable, whose beautiful fur is highly prized, is a marten. It is closely related to the pine marten and has much the same habits. The Book of Knowledge says that it is found in the forests of northern Asia, especially in eastern Siberia and Kamchatka. It is about twenty inches long from nose to root of tail and the tail adds another seven inches. A single sable skin has been known to cost more than $2,000.

ANGLICAN-CANADIAN LINK

An interesting link between Canada's House of Commons and "the mother of parliaments" in England is described in the Book of Knowledge. The two weather-beaten stone figures which stand at the entrance to the Parliamentary Library in Ottawa were part of the old House of Commons.
