

SIDELINE INSPIRATIONS

ECHOES

From the pages of the Herald, Oct., 1951, 1936 and 1916

- 10 YEARS AGO
A new merchant in Georgetown is Harry Marcus who has bought the men's clothing store of P. F. Blackburn on Main St. Mr. Marcus comes here from Toronto where he moved a year ago after spending most of his life in Whitby.
Countless numbers of Georgetown people saw Princess Elizabeth and the Duke of Edinburgh during their tour in the district. On Friday, when the Royal plane landed at Malton there were many from here at the airport.
Special devotions will be held in Holy Cross Roman Catholic Church next week when the pilgrimage statue of Our Lady of Fatima will be brought by Rev. Fr. Patrick J. Moore, S.F.H., by solemn procession from Aclon.
25 YEARS AGO
The Georgetown hockey club is entering two teams in the OHA this year, an intermediate and a junior team. All players in Georgetown and district are invited to be on hand Thursday night and meet the new coach Dick Carroll.
Mr. E. J. Leslie of Kitchener has purchased the Robert Watson property in Norval and will erect an up to date service station and tea rooms.
At the Gregory Theatre: The Country Beyond, starring Rochelle Hudson; Absolutely Quiet, starring Lionel Atwill and Irene Harvey; Sins of Man, starring Jean Hersholt.
45 YEARS AGO
Mr. Herrington addressed council Monday asking when the cemetery ground would be ready for planting of the Maple trees ordered from him. Also at council it was moved by Rush that the following names be added to the Georgetown Fire Brigade: Leonard Harding, proposed by K. McDonald, and Robert Hynds, proposed by Robt. Erwin.
A ball game came to a sudden end at College View last Sunday when the Chief appeared on the scene. Another such game will cause a police court.

Premiership Aspirants Seek Halton Support

The biggest political convention ever held in Canada is the prediction for the Conservative convention to select a successor to Premier Leslie M. Frost. Being held on October 23, 24, and 25, in the Varsity arena, some 5,000 delegates and interested P/Cs are expected to attend. Already the demand for accommodation has been very heavy, with the larger hotels already sold out. Delegates will attend from every riding in the province. In Halton county, where delegates are possibly a little more familiar with the candidates, due to the proximity to Queen's Park, strong leanings toward a number of the candidates are becoming evident. County visits from some of the 'hopefuls' have already been held, and the attorney general Kelso Roberts has already met with delegates and executive members, as has the minister of education, John Roberts. Other meetings of this type are expected to be held, with supporters of candidates holding 'meet the candidate' affairs at their various homes. Possibly the earliest one to begin active campaigning in Halton was the Hon. Bob Macaulay, who a few weeks ago visited Georgetown to open the Main Street. Mr. Macaulay has an active campaign organization here and has met many P/Cs and intends to be in the county to meet delegates in the near future. Bill Davis, youthful MPP from Brampton, is handling his overall campaign, while another young lawyer, Al Lawrence, of Tor-wide open. Candidates for the leadership are: James Allen, 66, who has held many cabinet posts, and often referred to as the premier's right hand man, from Dunnville; dairyman. Kelso Roberts: 62, attorney general in Ontario for past six years. Now a resident of Toronto. Held office since 1943. With Stan Hall, holds a record of one of the members with longest service in legislature. A. W. Wally Downer; an Anglican minister, from Dumfries, Ont. holds a record of almost a quarter of a century in the legislature. Former speaker of the House. Matt Dymond: 48, Minister of Health, ex-Minister without Portfolio. A physician, from Port Perry. John Roberts, London lawyer, holds important post of Minister of Education, 48 years of age. R. W. Macaulay, 40, minister of energy and resources. Elected in 1951, cabinet minister for four, author of several books on legal and political work. Considered by many one of the most brilliant minds in the government. Son of Hon. Leopold Macaulay, former Ontario cabinet minister.

Announce Winners In Raffles at Manor

In two recent raffles conducted at Halton Manor, the following ladies were the prize-winners. Prize of a Dresden-plate quilt in the first raffle was won by Miss J. Newman, 480 Oriole Parkway, Toronto, with ticket No. 105. The first prize in a triple-prize raffle was won by Mrs. Mary Van Grunsven, R.R. 6, Milton, with ticket No. 19. It was a three piece luncheon set. The second prize in the same raffle, a linen luncheon cloth, was won by Mrs. B. Williamson, a resident of the Manor, with ticket No. 1. The third prize in the same raffle, a pony tail doll, was won by Mrs. N. S. Burrows, 84 Queen St., Guelph, with ticket No. 43. The members of the Hobby Class, under whose auspices the raffles were held, wish to thank all friends and members of the class who bought or sold tickets for these raffles.

Teaches Insurance Course in Brampton

Insurance agent Joek Armstrong has become a teacher for a second year and is giving instruction to a second year class at a training school for insurance men which will begin in Brampton later this month. Last year Mr. Armstrong instructed a first year class in the Life Underwriters training course. Last week he attended a moderators' course in Hamilton to fit him for his instructional duties.

Hardening of the arteries is the basic cause of coronary thrombosis, senility and strokes. It is, therefore, the biggest disease problem faced by mankind in the Western World.

SUGAR and SPICE By Bill Smiley

What did you do on Thanksgiving Day, this year? I hope you didn't just loiter around the house all day, drinking beer, and watching a group of thick-shouldered, thick-skulled young gorillas moving a small, brown ball back and forth on a large, green field.

Some years ago, I decided to set aside Thanksgiving Day as my annual day of giving thanks. If this seems revolutionary, you may as well know that I also combine with it Remembrance Day, which I don't enjoy on November 11th, because it's too cold and bleak and sad, then.

As a result, each Thanksgiving, I turn my thoughts rigidly away from the lingering green of the golf course, from the rainbow trout skulking deep from the sun and the shadow of the partridge-startled woods trail.

Each year, I try to spend Thanksgiving, or some part of it, in remembering and giving thanks. It's not a particularly religious production. This is all taken care of the day before, when we go to church and the minister reminds us of all we have to be thankful for, and of all the starving people in the world, and we sit there belching gently after our big bacon-and-egg breakfast, and wishing he'd cut it short so we could get out and enjoy a smoke.

No, I don't flop down on Thanksgiving Day and render lengthy and tedious thanks that my children are not mongoloid idiots, and that there's oil in the tank and food in the frig and a few dollars in the pocket. When you do that, it's difficult to keep a touch of superstition, of the knock-wood variety, out of the whole business. What I do is concentrate on all the good things that have happened to me in the past and give thanks for them.

For example, I'm thankful that I had the parents I did. That's a piece of blind chance, and I was luckier than most. I learned a lot of good things from them, and I just wish they had lived long enough to realize it. My mother taught me to hold my head up, and "if you haven't something good to say of a person, say nothing." My dad taught me, by example, something that has proved even more valuable — how to get along with a woman who never stops talking.

And my youth was good, too. Football in the fall, and going steady with a first love. Reading everything I could get my hands on, far into the small hours, and dozing through school next day. Roaring off with the boys to a country dance of a Friday night, and sparking the firm farm wenches who are all mothers now, and gray. Off to the university, a dashing foreign correspondent, well disguised as a hick of a boy.

And then the war, and all the dear, good, hilarious friends, and the fine times, and the big scares. Most of the friends
