"First-Class Honours" Teachers Rate Board

The Georgetown District High School Board can go to the front of the class. In a published rating of a supposedly confidential report, the Georgetown Board received the highest possible standing in each of three classifications. The report was compiled from answers to questions directed at staff members of high schools in the province by the Ontario Secondary School Teachers Federation. The teachers handed out first class honours to many of the small boards and only mediocre standing to the province's largest boards. The other two components of the now dissolved North Hamilton District high school board which was rated one of the worst in the province, Milton and Acton, were rated below Georgetown. The report, the third annual, was issued for the federation's 10,000 teacher members and was not intended for the eyes of school board members. It says it would be premature to suggest a trend in individual variations, but adds that the future should yield valuable information about individual boards in particular and staff-board relations in general. Each teacher received a questionnaire on which he or she was asked to rate the board on each of the three questions according to the scale: very good, acceptable, below average, and unsatisfactory. The local board is composed of Clarence Anderson, chairman; Fred Masterson, Douglas Lattimer, Tom Niven, Keith Webb, Harold Blairgow, and B. W. Brackenridge.
