HARRY HAREY SAYS:

Canada Now Disenchanted With Toy Performance

The Conservatives have not been able to hold office for more than five years at any one time since the election of 1892. Dr. Harey told a meeting of his campaign workers in Oakville last Friday night. "It takes by one term of office for the Canadian people to become disenchanted with their performance, and it would appear that it is the same story this time," he declared.

The Conservatives have not come up with a consistent leader able to hold office since the days of Sir John A. Macdowell, and the same pattern will be followed by the Conservatives when they were in power in the 30's. It has been apparent over the past five years, Dr. Harey contended.

"Both have been a government of guess or contradiction as is evident by the number of bad guesses that were made in the Fleming budget forecasts, both as anticipated government income and gross national product. The result has been billion more debt that Canadians will have to carry; unemployment at a time in 1941 reached as high as 11.3 of the total labour force. And now and as a crowning misachievement the devaluation of the Canadian dollar," he stated.

To illustrate what this latter word meant in terms of increased cost of living for Canadians he showed his listeners and advertiser which appeared in the local press last week. "I am sorry" the advertisement read "but due to

Old Parties Agree Socialism Taking Over

"Yes Sir! That's the way it is."

So say the P.C.'s when asked why the definite and admitted trend to socialism. Halton Social Credit candidate Irving Wilson asserted this week. Canadian people are getting too lazy to think for themselves, and too lazy to get out and vote consciously or conscientiously, he contended — and too lazy to do anything but wait for someone to charm them and do the thinking for them.

"As our P.C.'s under questioning said "if the people want to go socialist, this is what they will vote for or not vote against, in that case we might as well be the party that will give it to them." Even the Grits agreed and added "after all it is the vote that counts you know." Apparently they do not consider the Socialists any threat and can divulge these little intimacies safely," stated Mr. Wilson.

"We disagree!" he went on. "Canadians may be getting a little confused and discouraged but it has been noted before, Canadians can only be pushed so far until they dig in and say 'This is it, it's time to go to work.'"

The candidate continued: "Time and again on the field of battle when Canadians go to bat they go over the top with both teeth and bayonets bared. They may for a time appear to be trusting and a trifle pacific, but their conservative attitude allows for the benefit of the doubt until it comes to a showdown.

Wants Council Stick To 11.00 p.m. Curfew

Deputy Reeve Wm. F. Hunter is against council meetings lasting more than three hours.

Last Thursday he urged council to take a straw vote which would end all meetings at 11:00 p.m.

"Last Monday we sat until 1:30 a.m. or later and I think we should close our meetings at eleven whether the night's business is finished or not," said the deputy.

Sympathize

"I sympathize, but such a rule could be taken advantage of" said Cr. Fred Harrison. "There could be lobbying."

CARL ROULEAU SAYS:

Candidate Sets Sights On "People's Capitalism"

Halton N.D.P. candidate contended this week that there is a strong tendency among politicians and political commentators to bandy about words such as "free enterprise" and "socialism" as though they had some mystical qualities within themselves.

"It reminds me of the fictional Villizabeta that worshipped an image, but had long ago forgotten why he did it. Needless to say, they no longer had a democratic society. So let us clear away the few of the myth about 'people's capitalism'."

In the nineteenth century "free enterprise" was based on the premise that if every man pursued his own self-interest, that is, man as much profit as possible the community as a whole would benefit. Mr. Rouleau went on "This is a myth founded on the belief that the quality and price of goods was determined by the law of supply and demand in an open market. Those who held this belief and profited by it gave no consideration to the hundreds of thousands of women and children who worked in filthy mines and mills, under oppressive conditions. Nineteenth century capitalism is sometimes called as much a system of human misery as communism. The evil in these historical situations that human dignity is sacrificed to a system — or to the interests of a small group," he said.

Human conditions have improved since then "only because the workers learned to organize and governments have become dependent on his vote" he maintained. "But we have reached a crucial point in our development because in this age of mass media communication, arguments are elected by the amount of money they can raise for a campaign and which involves colossal sums of money in fact dependent on the contributions of large corporations," he stated.

"What must return to fix all that the economic system must serve man rather than man being a slave of the system. This involves a re-examination of this so-called 'free enterprise' system. How can it be free enterprise when six firms control 100% of nickel, copper, iron ore, and aluminum production in this country? How can it be 'free enterprise' when six firms control 90% of the production of automobiles, petroleum, gypsum, asbestos, primary textiles, fertilizers and agricultural implements? How can it be 'free enterprise' when the small business man must compete with the massive resources of the chain stores in terms of national advertising, bulk buying, 'loss leaders' etc? How can it be 'free enterprise' when in the great majority of cases management can have no hope in sharing in ownership and at most can look forward to a 'dog eat dog' race without security or the free exercise of human conscience?"

As for "people's capitalism," from the point of view of share holding, let us look at the facts. In 1956 only 2 per cent of the Canadian population owned more than $5,000 worth of shares. Ninety-one per cent had no stock holdings whatsoever. They had all they could do to meet their mortgages. Can you honestly say that this is economic democracy?"

But when you add to this the fact that there is between six to seven per cent of our work force unemployed, that there are several million Canadians who subsist on an income of $4,000 or less, that there are many who go without medical care because of economic circumstances, and that there are many students with the ability and desire to achieve who can get no further because they do not have the money, then, the pretence that we live in a society that provides equality of opportunity is shallow indeed. In my next column I will show how the New Democratic Party proposes to deal with these problems."

SANDY BEST SAYS:

Record is Criterion Says P.C. Candidate

What is the big issue of this election?

It is simply the record of your Conservative Government and its proposals for the future, against a three-day Liberal protest that they could do better. Better for whom?

The Conservative Government of the past five years has not only produced prosperity, it has shared it with the bulk of the citizens of this country as previous Liberal administrations never have.

Proof of this is the 30 per cent increase in personal incomes and the 30 per cent increase in payroll incomes since 1956. Nothing like this has happened before.

This is the sort of shared prosperity that has put a lot of Fords and Ramblers in the car ports of the many, rather than a few new Cadillacs in the driveways of the few. It has allowed Canadians to spend more money for the things they want and save more money than ever before. And while it is quite naturally short of perfection, it is a lot more than the Liberals have ever been able to produce anytime they have been in office.

All the Liberals have to say about this is: we could do better. They had ample chance to prove their claim before 1957; before wages went up 30 per cent; before people had a little money to spend for more than necessities, and a little more to put aside in their bank accounts.

The issue of this election for the Conservative Party is a record of action. It is a record of promises kept and of decisions faced rather than evaded in the pattern of indefinite compromise historically so dear to the hearts of Liberal big shots.

What are they using for leadership now? Four tired survivors of the debacle of their party in 1958, apparently so shattered by this event they have been unable to produce a single original idea since. So they say, we could do better.

Lester Pearson has been going around the country talking of free trade, oblivious apparently to the disaster this could be to Canadian industry. Paul Martin, Jack Pickersgill, Lionel Chevrier say nothing to correct him.

David Croft comes down here from his soft berth in the Senate apparently to defend Coyne in his undemocratic defiance of his elected employers. No paid official can prevail over parliament if democracy is to survive. Even to Mr. Croft, this much must seem basic.

And what has Pearson been telling the voters? Only that he can do better. Yet as far as I know, he has not proposed repeal of a single piece of Conservative legislation. Nor has he attacked any one of the 16 points of the John Diefenbaker program for the future. "And he has not been able to come up with a sound six-point program of his own. Let alone 16.

His candidate in Halton is going around challenging Conservative cabinet ministers, whom he knows are not available, to debate a lot of nonsense. You may have noticed already: he is careful not to challenge me.

Yet what need is there for debate as long as this party is still unable to offer intelligent alternatives to the Conservative record and to John Diefenbaker proposals for the next four years.

Meanwhile, when the Liberals say, we could do better, Canadians have a right to ask why they didn't do better, when they had the chance.

LARGEST NICKEL USER

The largest single use of nickel is in stainless steels. In 1941 about 170,000,000 pounds or 34 per cent of the free world's total consumption of nickel, went into these versatile alloys.
