

Vocational Emotional Problems Involved in School Guidance

"What is this new-fangled deal at the school called 'Guidance'?" and "Is it any good?" are questions a parent, whose advice can affect the whole lives of students, may ask.

It is exactly what the name suggests -- a place where the student can come for guidance, not only vocational but emotional.

The students themselves usually make the appointment to see Mr. Alan Prouse, the Guidance Director, who holds their discussions in strictest confidence.

Combat 'Trapped' Feeling

It is hoped through Guidance Departments, to combat the trapped feeling of repeated failure, which contributes largely to the much publicized dropouts of students in a public and two high school teachers was formed. The Director pointed out that the desire to help young people Guidance is not strictly vocational requirement. Any social or emotional problem will be heard and entitles may fail repeatedly, each time cutting deeper into his self-esteem, until at last he is convinced he is a failure. By channelling students into courses or subjects better suited to them, Mr. Prouse feels their self-respect is left intact, and they stay to complete their training. However, Mr. Prouse emphasized, his role is that of an advisor only, he cannot and would not wish to transfer a student from one course to another without the parents' consent. Herein lies a stumbling block. Many parents, and teachers too, must be confessed, look with a jaundiced condescending eye, on some courses, and push the student toward a course of their choice. The public must be educated to the value of technical, commercial and industrial courses.

REBELLIOUS STUDENT

In addition, Mr. Prouse gives aptitude and interest tests, but warns that one isolated test proves very little and that the tests and interpretations must be done by trained personnel. When confronted with a rebellious student, whose parents or relatives wish him to choose a career he himself does not want, Mr. Prouse reminds them they may know him better than anyone else. However, he does not criticize either view, but tries to lead the student to make his own decision, after talking freely.

"Guidance is simply specialized understanding and help," says Mr. Prouse, "and many teachers have been doing this long before Guidance departments were ever thought of." Guidance programs should be in both public and high schools, according to Mr. Prouse. He feels that many children are already delinquent prone when they arrive in High School. But with a Guidance teacher in Public School, to spot the problem early, it might be overcome. Sometimes the problem child is well above average in intelligence but develops poor work habits, and a hostile attitude.

Halton Roads O.K. Drifting in North

All country roads are clear and snowplows are running their normal shifts says Roy F. Smith, road superintendent.

"There is some drifting in the north half of the county, but the plows are out day and night," he declared. "There are no roads blocked. There never has been."

He said the drifting was worse in the northwest part of the county, but not serious, and plows were running two and three times a day over the bad spots.

Smith said the county has six snowplows. They work nine and a half hour shifts, day and night, but not all of them are always in operation.

Recent snow has just required routine clearing, he said.

The nominating committee presented their report and it was accepted unanimously. The executive is, President, Mr.

Half Bruce Trail Ready This Year

Half of the 300-mile Bruce trail along the Niagara escarpment from Niagara Falls to Tobermory on the tip of the Bruce Peninsula is expected to be completed by the end of this year. P. R. Gosling, director of the Bruce Trail Committee, told a meeting of the Toronto branch.

The trail will pass through this area at Limpusburg. He said the project is intended to encourage young people to hike and camp by providing a well-marked trail through some of the most attractive parts of Ontario. Branches have been assigned portions and each branch is responsible for its own section.

Aware of the heavy responsibility:

Mr. Prouse feels a genuine desire to help young people. Guidance is not strictly vocational requirement. Any social or emotional problem will be heard and entitles to a free service. Then too, being a participant in a strictest confidence, Director, "If I'm No ready-made solution in problems you," he comments. "Believe me, but sometimes the tell-all I had children, I knew if it helps the student sell much more about bringing the solution for himself. them up than I do now," he is convinced he is a failure.

By channelling students into courses or subjects better suited to them, Mr. Prouse feels their self-respect is left intact, and they stay to complete their training. However, Mr. Prouse emphasized, his role is that of an advisor only, he cannot and would not wish to transfer a student from one course to another without the parents' consent. Herein lies a stumbling block. Many parents, and teachers too, must be confessed, look with a jaundiced condescending eye, on some courses, and push the student toward a course of their choice.
