Local Firemen Help Battle Milton Blaze

Georgetown's Fire Department was thrown into action early Tuesday morning when the Milton brigade summoned help from Halton County Mutual Aid in battling a $150,000 blaze that ravaged the historic 'Old Mills' in the county town. As well as standing time, the old stone walls of the three storey building withstood the blaze and only the shell was left

The fire was brought under control in about two hours but firemen continued to pour water for several hours more on smouldering grain and alfalfa. The Milton fire chief said he had no idea how the fire started in the ancient building and refused to speculate on whether it might have been spontaneous combustion in the grain or a defect in electrical equipment.

in a recent centennial publication describing the town the mill was featured as its oldest landmark. It played a big part in the early life there. Established in 1822 by Jasper Martin it is said to be the reason for the 'mill town' that sprung up around it as settlers gathered from miles around, both this century and last, to have their wheat ground into flour.
