Ronnie Hill Convincing as Harvey's Friend Dowd

The invisible "Harvey" be- came visible in the Little Theatre's production last week, largely due to Ronnie Hill's portrayal of Elwood P. Dowd. Never for a second did he come out of the gentle, meek character, carrying even the slightest stooped posture to the end. Despite good performances from others in the cast, it was Ronnie Hill's show. Undoubtedly some of the credit for his performance should go to director Tony Lloyd.

Marie Barratt and Pat Barkhouse play the niece and sister, respectively, upon whom the burden of Elwood's eccentricities fall the hardest. Pat Barkhouse was a very convincing "put-upon" but still loving sister.

As a nurse Anita Pratt carries the love interest in a boy girl bit with young doctor Sanderson (Bill Barratt).

The barred older doctor, who eventually comes to see the "Harvey" he is supposed to make disappear, is ably handled by Jim Warren, while Jean Rundle as his wife, sees med natural and at ease in her role.

A brash young orderly, played by Ray Walton, grates on the nerves, as he was supposed to do, and the elderly judge, John Goebel, mumbled ineffectually, as he was supposed to.

In a very small part, Chris Fisher as a cab driver screamed to make quite an impact. Joe Martin drove their mother back to Calander.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Georgetown, 15 Eving St., will leave Malton this Sunday morning by plane en route to Honolulu, Hawaii, where they will attend a sales seminar of the Sealy mattress company. They had the uncomfortable chairs, Los Angeles and two days in Las Vegas on their trip, home.

Mrs. David Spicer will be returning to town this Friday after spending seventeen days in England. Mrs. Spicer flew to England to see her mother, Mrs. E. Bellamy, who is seriously ill in hospital. During her visit, Mrs. Spicer stayed at the home of her sister, Mrs. Lionel Brown, Bedford Road, Pool, in Dorset.
