Famous racing driver Stirling Moss tests a car's front end adjustment in a visit to an Ontario Department of Transport mobile safety check unit in Toronto. The British expert is shown here with Inspector Arnold Whitney and Ontario Safety Commissioner Walter B. G. Reynolds. He passed the province-wide safety check system as "one of the most effective ways possible to prevent accidents... if motorists have sense enough to have their cars tested." Eight of the Department's mobile units are now touring Ontario communities at the request of local safety groups, service clubs and other organizations.
