Inquest Jury Recommends Red Cross Safety Measures

A coroner's jury heard a Red Cross official charge that Terra Coils Conservation Park superintendent, Norm McMahon has a negative attitude toward water safety, when they listened to the facts surrounding the June 21 drowning of Nicholas Morrison, 8, of Toronto, Wednesday.

The greatest problem having to do with the safe waterfront in this area is the negative attitude of the park's superintendent who believes that regardless of what effort you make drowning will take place," said W. A. Delaney.

He told the coroners jury that float lines indicating water depths would have prevented the Morrison drowning.

The boy drowned when he waded out too deep and disappeared in the muddy water of the pool.

The Red Cross official said Mr. McMahon did not seem concerned that there were only three, instead of five, lifeguards on duty although there were more than 200 in the pool.

He said the superintendent's attitude was that a great number of lifeguards would make no difference.

The boy's body was found in the foot of water, only a few feet from an unattended guard.

Delaney reported that lifeguards the more babysitting you provide. "Parents take advantage and put their children into the pool for lifeguards to watch."

In his report Delaney noted the following: Three life guards were on duty instead of the usual five and the area was being used heavily. There was no loud speaker or p.a. system available on the day of the fatality. The loud hailer there for emergency procedures was away being repaired. There was no resuscitator available. The superintendent resisted most suggestions to improve the area.

The jury supported Red Cross recommendations that rescue equipment be made available to assist the staff; that the staff be given a continuous program of training to improve their skills; that a full complement of staff be available with adequate relief staff; that the swimming area be confined during slack periods so that staff can do an adequate job of supervising a smaller area; and that consideration be given to limiting the number of users of the water at any one time to eliminate congestion.

The jury added recommendations that a siren instead of a whistle be used to clear the pool in emergencies; and that co-co matting be placed on the sloping sides of the pool at the shallow end so young swimmers would not lose their

Set Seed Judging Competitions For Milton Next Week

This competition is open to farms, boys and girls from 12 to 20 years of age. It is held at the Agricultural Hall, Milton Fair Grounds and takes place in the evening starting at 7:45 p.m.

Contestants will judge one class of Oats, Barley, Corn, Small seeds, Hay and Potatoes and give reasons on 3 of these classes. There will also be a quiz on identification of 10 Forage plants and 10 Weeds.

This competition is sponsored by the Halton Soil and Crop Improvement Association in co-operation with the Ontario Department of Agriculture.

Army Worms Are Not Prevalent In Halton

No serious outbreak of army worms have been discovered in Halton County to date, but nearby areas have serious infestations.

If you check your crops in mid-July, you may not see any worms, as these worms burrow into the soil or crawl under stones or clods of dirt for daytime protection. The worms feed in the evening, so if you check your crops at dusk you will see the worms feeding.

When you check your crop, be sure to cover every square foot of the ground — don't be content to check one, small corner of the field. Oat and corn fields may look alright today, but be half eaten tomorrow.

Full grown larvae are two inches long, dark greenish-brown with white stripes on each side and one down the middle of the back.

They have a habit of cutting the oat panicle so oat kernels will be found on the ground where feeding is moderate to heavy. In corn, the worms do not move to the ground during the day, but remain in the plant.

Control materials are Sevin and Malathion. For information on rates and methods of application, contact the Ontario Department of Agriculture, Milton.
