350 Sea Enrow Tamed
A Little Theatre

Approximately three hundred and fifty people saw the Georgetown Little Theatre's first production of this season, "The Taming of the Shrew." The Hal-low-e'en festivities cut into the Saturday night attendance, normally the best night.

In the leading roles, Ron Hill played Petruchio in the strutting confident manner demanded, while Vera MacDonald as Katherine changed from the imperious strong-willed shrew to the docile Kate tamed by Petruchio.

Making their debut were six newcomers, Allstar Sutherland, as Tranio, Ivan Long as Grumio, Fred Roberts as Grumio, and Ron Costley as Curtis. All of these were fairly demanding roles for first appearances. The other two new faces Rose McCluskey and Freda Grittall played servant roles.

The other least tempestuous love affair was carried on by Ann Fisher as Bianca, Ron Hunt as Lucentio, and rival Ron Holcroft as Hortensio. Baptista, the father played by Eric Ming was just as bewildered by his offspring as any present day T.V. series.

Chris Fisher doubled up and played two roles, while Betty Fisher made a brief appearance

Hospital Auxiliary Display Prizewinner

According to reports at the convention of Ontario hospital auxiliaries held in Toronto last week, Georgetown is an excellent example of co-operation between hospital staff, board and auxiliary.

It is important that the community knows and realizes this. The hospital, its employees, board and auxiliary volunteers, does its best for the welfare of patients and in return seeks the help, personal and financial, of the community to maintain a smooth and steady operation.

Georgetown representatives at the convention were delighted when their display of "An Opportunity Sale" was second award in the fund raising section. The attractive miniature setting was created by Mrs. Logan MacDonald with the help of Mrs. George Hewson, Mrs. John Mills and Mrs. John Milton.

It can be seen, this week in the show window at the Herald office.

The actual project itself, on a bigger scale, is one of the auxiliary's annual fund raising events and takes place this Saturday.
