

KNOWLEDGE VIA TV TUBE IN GEORGETOWN SCHOOLS

EDUCATIONAL TELEVISION IS NOW PART of the week for pupils at Georgetown public schools where the new maths course is being explained in series beamed from Toronto and Hamilton stations. Here pupils of Park Public School's grade eight class concentrate on the latest addition to the classroom.

THE VIEW FROM THE BACK OF THE ROOM shows the new maths being flashed on the television screen in large numerals as pupils take note. The television receivers are used to relay other educational programs to the local senior grades as well as the 18-part new maths course.

Whole School Now Can Attend Year's Big Dance

The Georgetown District High School annual formal dances should not be open to outsiders, and part of the school should not be prohibited from attending.

"The dance should not be a formal since this stipulation tends to eliminate many of the student body because it is financially impossible for them."

Those were the views expressed by GDHS principal Donald Turner when he addressed high school board trustees on changes being made in the highlight of the school's social year this term.

In past years the student council, which arranges the function, has invited graduates out of high school for one, two and three years, but excluded students of grades 9 and 10.

The student council and Mr. Turner agreed to a compromise this year by which the entire student body will be eligible to attend — plus last year's graduates and their dates.

Some of the senior grade students objecting to the policy change have threatened to boycott this year's formal and hold one of their own outside the school.

The board members agreed wholeheartedly with Mr. Turner's thinking.

"Inviting the entire school is the democratic way of doing things, and your idea of making it semi-formal, a style of dress all should be able to afford, is a good one," trustee E. E. Hall commented.

Economy Now, Then How About New Water Tower?

Georgetown, Ontario, 31 Byron Street, February, 18th 1966

To the Editor, The Georgetown Herald, Georgetown, Ontario

Dear Mr. Editor: So Georgetown councillors are crying about not having money to spend on town projects this year.

Well, they never shed any tears last year when they voted to spend $340,000 over the next 20 years for a water tower which was not necessary at the present time.

I have never said that the water tower was not something that it would be nice for the town to have, but the town could have waited until some of the new industries made it necessary and the added assessment would have made it easier to pay for.

However, council members will have to tighten the corporate spending belt and will have to forego necessary spending because of the unbridled spending of last year.

Mayor Joseph Gibbons is commended on his last ditch fight against the tower, which, of course, had the endorsement of the majority of Council, and the Ontario Municipal Board whose duty it is to prevent municipalities from getting into just the position Georgetown finds itself today.

Yours truly,
Ed A. Peters
