Lorne Scots trainees pass saluting base at passing out parade.

Six weeks of basic training concluded for 48 first year members of the Lorne Scots Regiment when they marched in a passing out parade in Brampton Thursday.

The rookie militiamen received instructions in rifle drill, weapon handling, tactics and first aid and rescue work during their training.

A three day bivouac near Caledon last week was the high point for the trainees. The group learned to set up "hoochies" (tents made from rain capes and sticks), cooked their own meals and learned first hand how an army in the field lives.

The three day bivouac began with a six-mile march to the 100 acre Royal Canadian Engineers training area on Monday and finished late Wednesday night.

Monday after dark the students were kept busy with a night patrol. Throughout Monday for a 24-hour period the platoon ate emergency rations — which look and taste like candy — but are really high protein food.

On Tuesday the student militia ate nothing but combat field rations, which looked as good as home-made.

Everything from spaghetti to soup and hamburger patties comes in the ration package about one foot long by six inches deep, and lasts one person a full day.

Tuesday night saw a mock attack against an enemy force composed of the instructors. Minor tactics were practiced as the platoons advanced against a given point.

All the training is done at the 100-acre estate which the militia is allowed to use. It's the first year that the group has used the training grounds but other bivouacs have been held at an abandoned farm near the present site.

All the students live completely outdoors, sleeping in their hoochies.

One student commented "they're quite comfortable — theoretically. They try to make it as realistic and as tough as possible here."

The whole bivouac is organized by Lt. Tom Graham and Sgt. Major H. K. Walker, CD. Sgt. Jim Main is platoon sergeant in charge of training.

Three corporals also share the responsibility. Cpl. Don Davidson, Cpl. David Fitz-Gibbon and Cpl. Peter Mitton.
