Warden Promises Statement July 18 on Nurses' Dispute

Halton Warden William Coulter will make a statement to the press on the nurses' dispute with the county at next county council meeting to be held at Halton Centennial Manor, July 18.

Council earlier agreed not to reveal the content of talks and negotiations with the 23 public health nurses at Halton Health Unit until things were settled.

Warden Coulter was last week pressed by council to make a statement following appearances on television and newspaper reports from nurses' representatives who put forward their side of the story which had "resounded in bad press" for council.

"If nothing has been settled by the next meeting the press should have a report," urged Burlington Reeve Gordon Gallagher.

The first appeal came from Burlington deputy reeve Frank Rogers chairman of personnel committee. "I think something should be said about it anyway," he told the warden.

Added Milton deputy reeve Charles Menzly: "The problems that we have in negotiations with the nurses should be brought out in the open."

The public health nurses resigned en-masse last September demanding work contracts from the Board of Health and claiming lack of liaison with their employers. They have since returned to work.

The dispute still rages and the nurses refuse to lift the "grey listing" of the Halton Health Unit until things are settled.

The "grey listing" was imposed by the Registered Nurses' Association of Ontario, who are supporting their case.

Since September several rounds of talks with a special council negotiating committee have broken down. Meanwhile the dispute is in the hands of a conciliation officer.

Appoint New Brunswick Man New Halton M.O.H.

Doctor H.B. Hay, 51, of Moncton, New Brunswick, was appointed as Halton county's new medical officer of health, during a stormy meeting of county council here Thursday.

Main bone of contention regarding his appointment was his proposed $17,500 a year salary.

"I think it is outrageous," cried Milton deputy reeve Charles Menzly, who complained that former M.O.H. Dr. Archie Bull, was paid $1,000 a year less.

Dr. Hay who had a distinguished career with the RCAF, earning a DSO and two DFCs, has been employed since 1963 as medical officer of health with the provincial department of health New Brunswick.

He has served a population of 190,000, administered a staff of 18 public health nurses and five inspectors.

Milton reeve Austin Ledwith said of the four doctors who applied for the job, three were military men and the salary of one of them was presently $19,700 a year.

Warden William Coulter pointed out the new salary schedule for Dr. Hay had been brought up to par with surrounding counties and health units elsewhere.

When the appointment of Dr. Hay was approved by council with a recorded vote and only three members voting against it, deputy reeve Menzly was overheard to exclaim: "Ridiculous — should have thrown them all out; every one of them!"

Dr. Hay was appointed officer commanding the school of Aviation Medicine in 1950, and two years later became senior staff officer, medical service with the Canadian Joint Headquarters in London, England.

In 1961 he was appointed commanding officer RCAF, Institute of Aviation Medicine.

County Officials Dress The Part for July 1st

Ten former Halton County wardens, present warden William Coulter, county councillors Judge Alan B. Sprague and around 100 people turned up for Halton's Centennial Recognition Day Saturday.

Warden Coulter and Judge Sprague made a spectacular entrance in an old horse-drawn buggy and the Lorne Scots Pipe Band played for an hour and later paraded through the town.

Prayer was led by the Rev. R. P. E. Jeffares, Lowville and Nassagaweya Anglican Church, and benediction by the Rev. D. R. Nicholson, St. David's Presbyterian Church, Campbellville.

Old Customs
Many of those at the ceremony were dressed in old-fashioned costume and all were served with light refreshments and coffee by members of Campbellville Women's Institute.

Judge Sprague brought "greetings and felicitations" to the crowd.

"Canadians have indeed been carrying out the suggestion of our former Governor-General the Right Honourable Vincent Massey, when in his latest book he says when speaking of centennial programs: 'I would not like to see omitted from the program the element of fun-jug fun.'"

Judge Sprague said recognition should be given to the privilege of living in a land ruled in the name of Queen Elizabeth II; to "this vast land with its wealth of natural gifts."

He quoted selections from the New Year's speech to the nation by the late Governor-General, al Georges P. Vanier, who said: "the resolution which the Canadian nation must now propose for 1967 and for the century to come is the unity of our country."
