

TERRA COTTA PARK SETTING FOR 'Y' DAY CAMP

Picture a hot summer day and fifty children splashing and swimming at Terra Cotta, or hiking along a cool wood trail. These are the lucky children attending the Georgetown 'Y' Day Camp, held every Monday, Wednesday and Friday throughout July. They take a bus from the Georgetown Dairy or the G/S Television store at the Delrex Plaza, and spend a wonderful day at Terra Cotta. Campers bring their own picnic lunch, but milk is provided free by the dairy.

There are all kinds of activities at Day Camp — games, nature lore, sing-songs, crafts, swimming, all under the guidance of well-trained leaders. Sometimes a cook-out is planned. The children are told ahead of time to bring something they can toast on sticks over a fire. Fridays are special theme days, such as 'Indian Days.' The boys and girls make Indian costumes and have their daily programme 'Indian style.'

The 'Y' Day Camp is very popular — being completely filled for all of July. Where else can parents send their youngsters off for a fun-filled day of supervised activity for the bargain rate of $2.00 a day?

Recommend Safety Regulations For Commercial Swimming Spots

A five man coroner's jury consisting of foreman Thomas Beer, Robert Benton, Ed Wheelwright, Dave Barclay and Stuart Hall, recommending the death of 6-year-old Teresa Van Zutven, Oakville, Tuesday night, recommended that local and provincial governments enact stringent regulations for the safety of the public using commercial swimming areas.

While stating the primary responsibility for the safety of young children lies with the parents, the coroner's jury also recommended that certain minimum standards be set up by the local government.

The jury convened June 17th at Waterfalls High School, Limited, on a picnic of Imperial Truck and Trailer employees.

The jury recommended the adoption of suggestions made in a report by Brian Patterson, supervisor of the Red Cross Water Safety Service, who made 3 visits to the playground at the request of James Powell, the Chief Inspector of the Halton County Health Unit.

Applying as a witness, the Water Safety supervisor suggested that qualified staff be hired to guard the area and safety equipment, including a yellow flag to be purchased. He concluded that the low precautions taken at Waterfalls were inadequate.

Joseph Dreyfus, owner of the playground, testified that he told groups of boys came in the gate where the shallow end of the pond was located. He added that he usually patrolled the pool area himself. When the girl was seen he had been in the pool for some time. He went at that time because it was raining and few people were in the pool, he said. He pointed out that Mr. and Mrs. Neils Bombholt, and two girls who help run the canteen and his sister were there.

Coroner Dr. J. H. Chamberlain noted if there were signs warning of the various depths Mr. Dreyfus said no.

In answer to a question from jurymen Stuart Hall, Mr. Dreyfus stated he needed no permit to open and run an area such as this.

James Powell, the sanitary inspector for the Halton County Health Unit said there were no regulations that would allow the county to close the playground for lack of safety regulations. Only if there were a health hazard could the area be closed, said Mr. Powell.

Teresa was found floating face down by twelve year old James Hachey and nine year old Kenneth Heiser, who at first thought it was a doll. Both boys testified.

Mary Van Zutven, the girl's mother, said she last saw her daughter playing in the shallow end of the pond. When the other children returned to the picnic area, Mrs. Van Zutven went to look for her daughter. Fighting back the tears, she noted seeing a crowd gathering at the other side of the pond, and learned it was Teresa.

Neils Bombholt, summoned by the two frightened boys, pulled the girl out.

Mrs. Van Zutven suggested Teresa had slipped into the deep water, when she took off her shoes, which were found by the tree, to paddle her feet.

Two nurses on the scene applied artificial respiration and cardiac massage, on the way to Georgetown Hospital.

Dr. Alan Thompson, the attending physician at the hospital said that even though there was no sign of life when the girl arrived they worked on her for an hour and a half and finally started her heart beating with a machine, and returned her blood pressure to almost normal. At this point Dr. Thompson decided to have her taken to Oakville hospital.

By the time the ambulance reached Oakville her condition had worsened considerably, but still registered some heart beat, and much lower blood pressure.

In the Oakville hospital, Dr. F. B. Roberts said several doctors tried all available revival methods but at 8.15 about an hour after her arrival there, was pronounced dead.

Dr. H. B. Waldorf, regional pathologist, who performed the autopsy, said any attempt at revival would have been unsuccessful, and death was 'inevitable', regardless of all the time and effort spent.

He stated that a length of time without breathing leads to brain damage, which in this case would be permanent and irreversible.

The jury deliberated about half an hour before reaching their verdict.

Crown attorney Peter McWilliams commended the medical team for the 'heroic' efforts to save the girl's life. He also urged that Medical Officers of Health be given flexible powers to use at their own discretion, to close areas without adequate safety standards.

He stated that a length of time without breathing leads to brain damage, which in this case would be permanent and irreversible.

Predict Brampton to be Canada's Fourth City

Within 20 years Brampton and Bramalea will form part of what will be the fourth largest city in Canada, Port Credit developer Bruce McLaughlin predicts.

In a release on the need and importance of progressive and long-term planning in Peel County, Mr. McLaughlin states Toronto Township, Port Credit and Streetsville will unite to form a single tier municipal unit brought about in progressive steps.

"In about 20 years," he says, "it will probably be advisable to form a new metro embracing Brampton, Bramalea, and Oakville and perhaps other portions of Peel and Halton counties in combination with the new city."

Mr. McLaughlin's developments also includes the Brumac and Metropolitan Halton projects in Georgetown, which he purchased from Delrex Developments a year ago.

Based on Population
Based on population figures in the Plunkett local government review, Mr. McLaughlin sees these areas becoming part of the fourth largest city in Canada.

The report estimates population in these municipalities will total 426,700 by 1980, but this, according to local planners, is a conservative estimate.

Harry Petschan, Toronto Township's planning director, says the township's present 105,000 population will triple to 315,000 by 1980.

Raymond Skelly, a planner with Canadian Mitchell Associates Ltd., the firm responsible for Bramalea planning sees the combined population of Brampton and Bramalea expanding to 230,000 by 1985.

Present Population
Brampton now has 35,000 and Bramalea 10,000.

He said Bramalea's population will rise to at least 150,000 with Brampton having an 85,000 population by 1985.

The recent transportation report by M. M. Dillon, Ltd., for Brampton and area estimates a 70,000 population for the town in 1985.

The McLaughlin firm is now working on getting its mammoth Green Field Shopping Centre in South Peel off the ground following last month's rejection of Sherway shopping centre in Elobicoke by the Ontario Municipal Board.

The McLaughlin release states that the centre could become the core for the new trans-county city.
