New Firemen Herb Wild and Harry Brandford

"Not all the men are available all the time and it leaves us actually with a smaller firefighting force than we have on paper," he told The Herald,

Chief Lewis advocates a fire department which is made up mostly of volunteer men but includes at least two permanent firemen. 'This way could save the men and their employers a lot of time especially in the cases of fires of a minor nature' said the Chief.

He said on many occasions brigade members are called from their jobs by a daytime fire that could be handled by a couple of permanent firefight-

"Industry has been very good in allowing its firefighting employees to answer an alarm, but I'm sure their generosity isn't unlimited. Somewhere along the line we'll have to go to a semi permanent force or at least find different factories to draw our new men from" the Chief said

Georgetown's fire department has been at the 25 man level since it served a town of 3,000 population, until the spring when Herb Wild, George Brandford, Bud Hyde and Tom Massena joined the brigade. The town's population is pushing 12,000 and another 3,000 live in the Esquesing Township fire area also the responsibility of this department.

"Brampton had six permanent firemen when the town's population was at 8,000. They now have 23 full time," he said "Milton and Acton, both smaller than Georgetown, have larger fire departments."
