

THEY FOUND HOMES

THESE FOUR BABIES who arrived at Halton County Children's Aid late in the year, and five who arrived a week earlier, are all in new homes for the start of 1968. They were all sent here by the Western Ontario Children's Aid in London because of an emergency situation there. Dr. Gordon Askwith, in charge of the Halton society said: "this situation has been building up in London for some time and it finally got to the point where they have babies still in the maternity hospitals with no place to send them." The Halton County society has a 59 per cent permanent adoption record - highest in the province last year. Dr. Askwith attributed the local group's good record to many factors, including the quality of his staff and the area in which they operate. "We live in an area with many couples adopting babies, probably because we are by and large a suburb of Metro and Hamilton and because Halton has Canada's highest per capita income," he said.

Still Seek Clues to Missing Kilbride Child

Eight months have passed since 10 year old Marianne Schuett of Kilbride in north Halton disappeared, but the search for the missing child still continues. So far, however, the results have not been encouraging.

A member of the Burlington detachment of the Ontario Provincial Police said that the file on the case is still open and the investigation is going forward, although no new leads have been turned up as yet.

"The officer of this detachment who was on the case has been transferred to Port Credit," said the officer. "Inspector Lidstone of the Criminal Investigation branch is still investigating."
