

New Youth Newspaper
"Issues" Next Week

Issues Magazine, Georgetown's new youth newspaper, will hit the news stands on Monday, January 22.

The paper according to a staff member is created with the aim of proving youth responsibility and will attempt to fill the communications gap of the younger generation of this area. It intends not only to carry the message of responsibility to the young, but also to communicate the actions of youth to the adult society. To achieve that end the paper has compiled several editorials, a news section, features and an article on youth responsibility for the first issue.

The editorial staff includes Tony McAuley (managing editor), Roger Smith (news editor) and David Warren (feature editor). In addition, Doug Stephens takes command of sports. Dick Lindner, of network and Alex Goudeketting is commercial representative in charge of advertising.

The first edition's contributors include Dave Bhanay, Alex Goudeketting, Angelika Sommer, John Sommer, Gord Layton, Ian McCormick and the editorial staff.

A press run of 1,000 is planned for the debut. Single copy price will be fifteen cents. The magazine contains some twenty six pages.

The bimonthly is sponsored by the Students for Responsible Action organization, recently formed during the youth responsibility issue.

"Some Say Not Worth While"

Hundred Halton Dairy Farms
Ceased Operations Last Year

Halton dairy farmers in large numbers are giving up this type of farming. According to Halton County agricultural representative Henry J. Stanley, the number of dairy farms in the county dropped from 400 to 300 in the past year.

Some of the owners discontinued farming completely. Mr. Stanley is of the opinion that the county's overall milk production will not be affected, however, as the remaining farmers are increasing the size of their herds, and improving their methods of milk production.

Denzil Lawrence, leading dairy farmer, who is president of the Halton Federation of Agriculture and a governor of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, said the trend is partly due to the new requirements of the Ontario Marketing Board which is introducing a new milk pool system in February.

"The board has had their strict regulations as far as dairy farmers' buildings are concerned," said Mr. Lawrence.

"Some farmers just don't feel that it is worth their while to continue. A number of them have sold their farms and gone out of business."

"Those who remain are enlarging their herds in order to make their businesses pay. The large farms are becoming more mechanized all the time," he added.

Most of Halton's dairy farms are now mechanized, Mr. Lawrence said.

"A good dairy farmer will try to increase his average production per cow to meet the extra costs," he continued. "He can do this by good breeding and good management."

Land Prices

Another reason for the abandonment of dairy farming now in progress, according to Mr. Lawrence, is the greatly increased price of land in the Halton farming area.

"In this area land values have got so high that unless a farmer is young he is not going ahead with dairy farming," he said.

"Prices have gone as high as $1500 an acre. Few — if any — new farmers are coming into the district."
