

Snow Queen Pageant is GDHS Winterfest Feature

Some of the plans scheduled for the high school Winterfest have gone awry, but the show will go on three days later than planned. Instead of starting Monday, and being a week long festivity, it will now run from Thursday, Feb. 27 till Sunday, March 2.

Dogs Only, In This New Beauty Business

A beauty shop for the well-groomed dog has been started by Mrs. Margaret McNeil, 2 Rosefield Drive. The service is truly personalized since she takes only one dog at a time, with same-day service. She does not board any dogs, and does not intend to, since she has no facilities.

The dogs are brushed, bathed, clipped even manicured to emerge with the sleek dog look envied by all other dogs.

The hobby turned business began when she bought a French poodle for her son, when another dog was killed by a car. She decided to learn how to look after it herself, and registered in the Canadian School of Dog Grooming, known as the House of Poodles in Willowdale.

"Imagine me a raving beauty!"

"Ho hum, I wish she'd hurry."

"Hey! That feels good."

GEORGETOWN CREWMEN RISK LIVES

Patched Up Super Connie Ready To Resume Nocturnal Mercy Flights

Roland Sparling, one of the two Georgetown men with the crew of Canada's only plan flying relief cargo into Biafra, is enroute to France today after an enforced furlough which enabled him to spend a few days with his family at 59 Duncan Drive.

The unscheduled interruption in the Canair relief flights from Sao Tome to Biafra was brought about a week ago last Sunday when bombs, dropped on the Biafran airstrip by an enemy plane nicknamed the Intruder, exploded close enough to punch six holes in the skin of the converted Super-Constellation.

The big plane was flown back to the Sao Tome island and then shuttled to Lisbon, London and finally a small airport south of Paris before arrangements to repair it satisfied the Captain J. S. Patterson. Speed was the important factor since for every night the Canair relief plane missed, the Biafran people missed 36 tons of food.

The other Georgetown crew member, Dennis Hughes stayed in France to oversee the repair work while the rest returned to their homes.

In an interview Tuesday, Sparling told The Herald, the crew members used their time back here to help support a drive in Toronto for $500,000 to keep the plane flying.

He said the crew members have become so swept up in the plight of the Biafran people they have pledged their next pay cheques to the Canair relief operation, and are prepared to keep flying the foodstuffs into Biafra well beyond the three months for which they originally committed themselves.

Since they started the operation January 22, the Canair relief crew have made 28 flights from Sao Tome to the small Uli airstrip which used to be a piece of highway. Their regular routine of two runs per night may be stepped up with the addition of an extra trip which would make their nightly shipment something like 51 tons.

The flight from Sao Tome to Uli is slightly more than 300 miles. It takes the Super Connie about an hour and a half to make the trip one way, and an additional 10 minutes returning. The first flight take-off is at 4:30 so that the plane and twilight hit the Nigerian coast at about the same time. Deadline for the departure from Uli after the last run is 12 hours later in order to get past the gun boats off shore under the mantle of the pre-dawn darkness.

The landing at Uli is the riskiest part of the whole operation. The plane approaches the blacked out landing site on a beam, and as it is just about to touch down, lights are flicked on long enough for it to get down and flashed off again before the Intruder has time to set his sights.

The bombs, usually about six, come anyway, and in most cases explode harmlessly well off target. Sometimes the Canair relief crew throw a curve at the intruder by making a phoney approach, conning him into dropping his bombload on a non-existent field.

On the night that the Canadian plane was damaged the intruder dropped nine bombs on the strip just after touchdown and it was the last three that came close enough to punch the holes. A piece of shell from one of them is now a souvenir in the Sparling home and this week it was toted to school by one of the Sparling children as an unusual contribution for "show and tell."

The financial statement was presented, showing receipts of $1,050.15 with $1028.25 of that amount having been forwarded to the head office of the Canadian Bible Society.

Seek More Members For ACLD Organization

"We are anxious to have more paid up memberships prior to getting our official charter," a member of the Association for Children with Learning Disabilities told The Herald this week.

The association, recently formed, has had an enthusiastic reception to date by parents of children who hope to be aided by the association. Meetings have been informative, and at this month's meeting those who attend will hear Dr. Joan E. Bowers, an Ontario department of education psychologist.

An election of officers is planned in March. To date a temporary committee has been guiding the organization of the new association.

DR. R. GASKIN BIBLE SOCIETY '69 PRESIDENT

The executive for 1969 will be President Dr. R. Gaskin; secretary, Thomas Parry; treasurer, Douglas Cole. The executive are already making plans for a canvass for funds in the fall of 1969.
