

No dogs need apply . . .

MILTON—Milton isn't going to the dogs, not just yet, anyway. After municipal councils were asked to look into the use of police dogs a while ago, Councillor Gordon Krantz and Police Chief Ray Andress did some investigating and agreed on two things—dogs aren't needed in Milton yet, and besides, they're a pretty expensive proposition. Councillor Krantz told members of council this week the Chief didn't feel any need to have dogs patrolling with the constables. The cost would run $1,200 a year to feed and house the dog, and the force would need a special station wagon in which the dog would ride to the scene of the crimes. Another piece of information imparted to council indicates Milton police are doing a fine job on clearing up cases. According to Dominion Bureau of Statistics records, the force has a clearance rate of 52 per cent—seven and a half per cent above the provincial average.

Jude loses to Frank . . .

GEORGETOWN—St. Jude lost out again last week for the second time in a year. St. Jude was dropped from the list of saints by the Catholic church last year, and last week Halton County Separate School Board reversed a decision to name the new $350,000 school in Georgetown after him. The board considered St. Jude as the name for the second Georgetown separate school last month, but trustee Father B. Ryan wasn't convinced St. Jude was still a bona fide saint, so the decision was passed on to the Bishop of the Hamilton Diocese, Joseph Ryan. Bishop Ryan suggested to the board that the school be named after St. Francis of Assisi. St. Jude is the patron saint of hopeless causes.

Cheltenham 150 years old . . .

CHELTEHAM—This quiet hamlet will celebrate its 150th birthday, August 6 with a giant street dance. Cheltenham's first modern street dance was last year when twice its population of 400 took part. "It was the most exciting thing in my life," said Peter Haines, 17, whose great-great-grandfather Charles Haines founded the village in 1820. The Haines family still lives in Cheltenham and owns its most distinctive landmark, an old saw mill on the Credit River. The original settler in Cheltenham was Charles Haines, and it's not clear whether he arrived in 1819 or 1820. He was from Cheltenham, England and a millwright. A small mill served him for the first decade, then the Haines family built two more before 1870 when the final one, still standing, was built. The others burned down and were washed out in a flood. In the pre-steam and pre-railway days, the river was the important source of energy for industry and Cheltenham was a thriving community at least as large as it is now, Theodore Haines, Peter's father said. It had three hotels, several stores, a blacksmith shop, tannery and a cooper shop before 1900. The village centre was burned to the ground in 1870.

Exchange aids understanding . . .

BURLINGTON—Differences between the English-speaking and French-speaking regions of Canada are becoming a little easier to understand for a pair of 15-year-old girls currently enjoying a French-English student exchange program. For two weeks in the early part of July Donna-Jane Byers of Walker's Line, North Burlington, holidayed at Les Escoumins, Quebec at the home of Marise Marcellin and her family. Then for two weeks Marise came to Ontario to spend a holiday with Donna-Jane and her family. The exchange visit was one of 500 such visits organized this year by the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews. Donna-Jane attends M. M. Robinson High School in Burlington. She was one of two Robinson students in a group of 30 Burlington teenagers taking part in this year's 5th annual CCCJ exchange program. The 1,500 students from all across Canada travelled by train to Quebec July 2, then went by bus to their adoptive homes around the outer reaches of the province. DJ discovered her exchange partner Marise, also 15 years of age, lives in a small lumbering town called Les Escoumins on the St. Lawrence River about 200 miles north-east of Quebec City. She describes the town as "Gorgeous—Beautiful" and found the people quite friendly there, especially when she attempted to speak her high school French to them. Because the visit was designed to encourage bilingualism and help develop understanding and goodwill between English-speaking and French-speaking students, DJ spoke as much French as she could while in the Quebec town. "It was amazing how much French I learned in the first few days," she reported.

Start soon on industrial plaza

MILTON—This town's first industrial plaza will soon be taking shape on the former Harrop farm north of Base Line Rd. Milton Council endorsed provision of sewer and water lines and a road into the industrial subdivision of Alliance Building Corporation and agreed in principle with a rezoning of the lands, at a meeting last week. Alliance has purchased all of the Harrop farm except the original century-old stone farmhouse which Bert Day, owner of Mohawk Inn at Campbellville plans to turn into a tearoom and possibly a motel. Alliance plans for the property include an eventual array of 13 industrial buildings, a 70-room motel facing Highway 25 and a five-storey, 60,000 square foot office building facing Base Line Rd. Right now Alliance is anxious to start its industrial-commercial plaza with a 24,000 square foot industrial shell that it would subdivide into accommodation for about four small factories.

Can check temperature to prevent hay fires

Spontaneous combustion within a haymow can destroy the hay and the building in which it is stored. To take the temperature, a half-inch pipe or tube approximately 10 feet in length can be used. The end of the tube should have a point of hardwood riveted to it, and a few holes, one-quarter inch in diameter, made just above the hardwood. The tube should be inserted into the hay. Drop a candy or oven thermometer attached to a string into the tube and leave it for five minutes. After five minutes the temperature should be noted and compared to the following scale: if the temperature is 150 degrees, the danger zone is near and observations should be made every day; at 160 degrees, inspections should be made every four hours; at 175 degrees, fire pockets may be anticipated and the fire pumper called to wet down the hay. If the temperature reaches 185 degrees, the hay should be removed and the fire pumper available, since flames will develop when the fire pockets contact the air. A temperature of 210 degrees means the hay is almost sure to ignite, says Mr. Wright. Workmen should never work alone and should always have ropes tied around their waists as a safety measure when working on the haymow. Long planks should be placed over the hay
