The clergy speak out

By Rev. A. Walter Fosbury
Churchill Community Church

These lines are being written in a convalescent hospital room in the City of Toronto by one who has been incarcerated in hospital since September 27 of this year. During that time, he has undergone a complete hip operation, six days after which he was on his feet learning to walk again. Three weeks after the operation, he is on the way to having re-learned the art of walking naturally.

It is hardly necessary to say that, during the days spent in hospital, much has passed through the writer's mind - things such as the matter of possible death and the success or failure of the operation, which was performed on a highly infectious area. There was, however, no thought of fear re the future and there were several reasons for this. One of these was that folk of varied denominational persuasions, and some of no church affiliation at all, were offering prayers on his behalf.

Another reason was the realization that he was under the care of several of Toronto's ablest and most dedicated physicians. The surgeon who performed the operation, Dr. Thomas Wright, made one remark previous to that operation which lifted the spirits of his patient to the realm of steady faith and assurance. He said: "We surgeons do not play God, but we work with Him." This, coming from a comparatively young man, immediately endeared the writer to him.

Looking over life at large, I have been so often impressed by the dedication of some folk to their life's work. Their work is to them not just a job; it is a profession or calling. To it they give themselves with superb dedication. This is their be-all and end-all.

Like the young university graduate, who complained to his general manager that he was not being given enough to challenge his time and talents and that he was tired of just putting in time. So many are quite prepared to loaf in all the time they can and are forever griping about the poor pay they receive.

In the ranks of hospital workers, as elsewhere in the world of workers, I have learned that there are three main groups. There are those, who, like the doctors I have mentioned, are dedicated to their tasks. These tasks are associated with a calling. They are faced in the spirit of service - of doing what good I can do to the best of my ability. These are to be found among the lowly orderlies, as well as among the doctors and surgeons.

One orderly whom we affectionately called "Mike" said to me the first night I was a patient in the orthopedic ward, "If there is any way I can be of help to you, sir, let me know." He spoke with a pronounced central European accent. Among these orderlies, the colored personnel were the most courteous and helpful.

A second group of workers among the hospital employees, as elsewhere in the labor force, may be labelled the duty-doers. These stick to the letter of the law, and woe-betide the patient who does not toe the line or keep within the bounds of the recognized rulings. With these folk, all must, more or less, follow the same regulations, no matter what the physical condition of the patient may be. If the directions indicate he is to tie himself up like a human pretzel, in spite of the fact that he is stiffened by arthritis, then he must do it.

There are the sergeant-majors among senior nurses, too. Fortunately, the patient can always appeal to his doctor and get such orders changed. A third group of hospital workers, are those who quite clearly are not possessed of the idea that their work is anything but a job. So the thing to do is put in all the time you can and do as little as possible. Why run yourself ragged for that old guy who might as well be dead anyway?

I, personally, fail to understand how anyone, who is trained as a nurse, can ever carry on as such, lacking the desire to help the patient to the utmost and having little of "the milk of human kindness" in her nature. Most nurses do their best for their patients. Especially is this true of the younger followers of "the lady of the lamp".

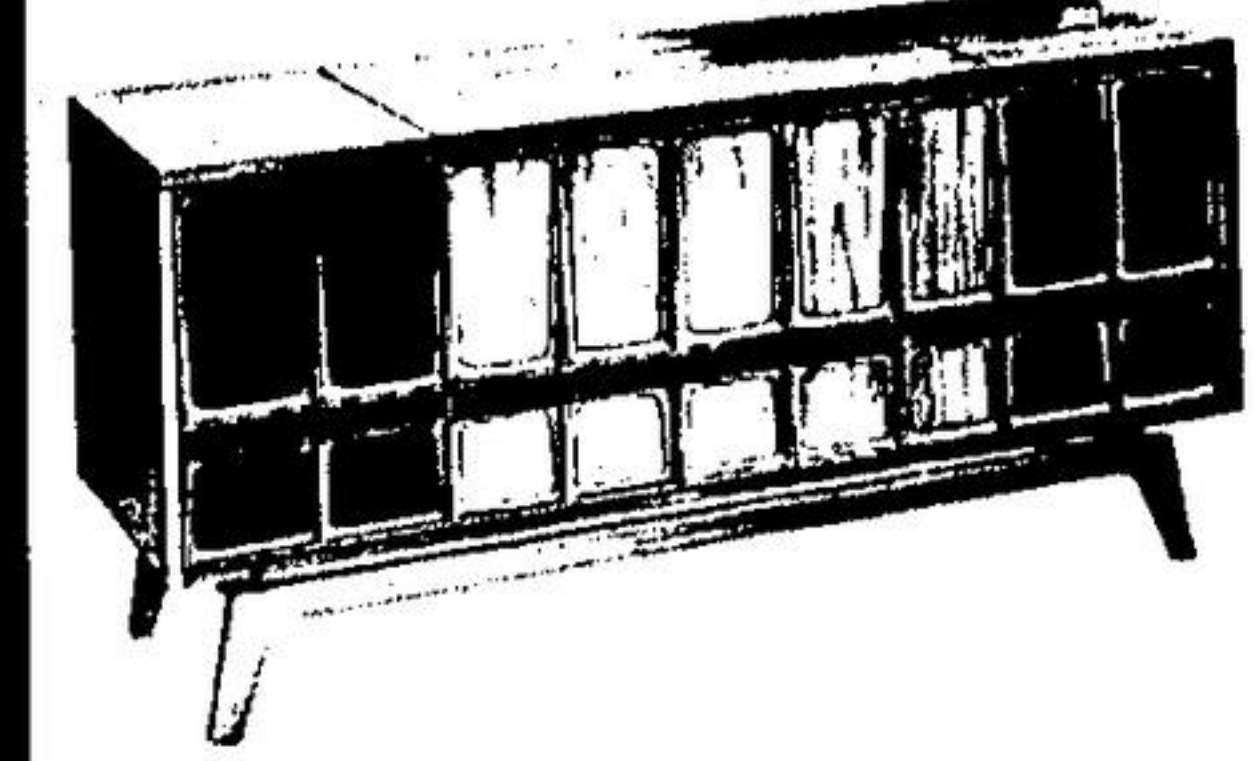

All who are called to serve in any capacity as doctors, nurses, orderlies, physio-therapists or what have you, should recognize that this is a calling - a calling in the ministry of helpfulness. But then every line of work engaged in by the professing Christian should be considered by him as a calling and not as just a job.
