Luncheon

By Wendy Thomson

The dog isn't the only one showing signs of jealousy these days. Out in the pasture, Black Velvet is being the typical Queen of the Hilltop and lording it (ladying it?) over everything else just because Beau has come to visit.

Beau is the handsome, grey, % Arab gelding belonging to Alicein-town, on loan for Gord to ride when he has the time. He's friendly, mannerly, and loves people (that's Beau, not Gord.) When he first arrived, he was put in a small corral and spent half the day watching the horses in the pasture and the other half, wistfully looking up the drive where he'd last seen Alice. Even at 2 in the morning, when I put the cat out the back door, I heard a soft but plaintive whinny in the dark, waiting up from the corral.

Not being able to stand this air of great loneliness, the next day I led Beau over to the gate to the pasture. There was a huge thud and scuffle as the two ponies, Daisy and Earl Grey, crashed into one another trying to be the first to greet the newcomer. Talk about eagerness! I had to just about beat them about the tail end to move them enough so that I could maneuver Beau in.

Then, for about 10 minutes, he stood and hardly twitched a muscle while Earl stood with his nose to Beau's, breathing a breath back and forth, and Daisy inspecting his ribs. Then the ponies changed places and Beau went through it all again. That must have settled something (other than that he had clean breath and all his ribs) because the ponies stepped back while Beau reared, wheeled around, then took off, jumping the creek and racing up the hill with ponles in pursuit. When they reached the top, they stopped with much prancing, blowing, and mane tossing, before flying down the other side in a majestic sweep.

Cattle join in

Before they reached the bottom, our six beef cattle got caught up in the excitement and joined in, making the whole thing quite comical, the first three being light, graceful and quite beautiful, and the cows, well, I don't think that they're built for running. Their heads seemed about to fall off, and their legs kept flying out in the oddest directions.

And Velvet? Well, when Beau was in the corral, she'd had a good look at him and decided that if she ignored him, he'd maybe go back where he came from. This stitude lasted all through the first half hour that Beau was in the pasture, although I could see that she kept one very wary eye on him constantly.

Then he made the mistake of putting one foot on the particular acre that she was grazing on. She must have been all tensed and waiting for that excuse, because she shot towards him as though she was jet-propelled, teeth bared, ears back.

Threat to kill

Up and down the pasture they went, Velvet not being able to close in for the threatened kill. Beau had a distinct advantage by being able to turn faster, leaving my ratty mare heading west while he was halfway back to the eastern fenceline. Finally, tiring of this, Beau plunged into some scrub brush by the fence and took refuge in its density.

Then Velvet did her "Queen of the Castle" bit, prancing to the top of the hill on feet so light that she looked as though she was barely touching the ground. With much head tossing she proclaimed pasture ownership and pointed out how she'd just shown Beau who was boss.

And right alongside her came the colt (who'd been holding his own in all the racing around) also prancing with light, springy steps, tossing four inches of mane, and saying "Yeah, my Mom sure showed him!"

Fire and fury

That was over a month ago, and although Velvet snakes out at Beau if he comes within 15 feet of her when some-one's watching, I've seen them during the day, all standing in a small close group, drowsing contentedly in the sun till one spies me, nudges the other, and off they go, Velvet all fire and fury, Beau just winging away up the hill.

An exceptionally good recipe for Christmastime, either for giving or for eating, follows:

BUTTER ALMOND CRUNCH Generously butter jelly-roll pan or cookie sheet. In a heavy saucepan combine 1 cup brown sugar, I cup butter, 4 cup water. Cook stirring constantly with wooden spoon over medium heat, to 300 degrees on candy thermometer (hard crack stage). Remove from heat and quickly stir in 1 cup chopped almonds and 15 tsp. vanilla. Immediately pour into prepared pan, spreading to form a large rectangle 1/4 inch thick. Meanwhile, melt 6 ounces semi-sweet chocolate chips over hot (not boiling) water. Spread over warm candy and sprinkle with 1/2 cup walmut or pecan pieces. Refrigerate about 2 hours till chocolate is firm. Break into pieces.

on Dec. 10. Miss Isobel Anderson, the part of the meeting Miss Roszell president, opened the meeting with a poem and a prayer. Joy to the World was sung followed by a wayer led by Mrs. A. Near.

The theme of the meeting was the Christmas story which was presented in a very interesting way by Miss Anderson. Interspersed with the recitation of scripture was presentation of the story by means of song.

Qulits specialty A specialty of the members was the making of quilts, through the years, and many a beautiful quilt has resulted from their good workmanship.

Mrs. M. McCullough, the present president, occupied the chair on this anniversary occasion, for the singing of the Institute Ode and the repeating of the Mary Stuart Collect and Lord's Prayer.

Mrs. M. Hunter read the minutes and called the roll. The members responded to it by answering "What can I do to make Christmas happier for others". To share little remembrances and visit with the older people and the shut-ins in the community was the general consensus of opinion.

Mrs. W. Britton, as sales convener, handed in a further sum of money from their sales at Stewarttown.

Sacred program The meeting was turned over to the program committee, and Mrs. Wallace Lasby conducted a very beautiful sacred program telling the Christmas story interspersed with the singing of Christmas Carols with Mrs. M. McCullough at the plano. An impressive candle-light service

A beloved former member of the Branch, Mrs. Pearl Kennedy, of Acton, was present. She has been the Curator of the Branch for some time, and spoke of her work in compiling the material. She exhibited several pages from the Tweedsmuir History Book of the district. Many pictures of officers of the Dublin Women's Institute down through the years, as well as pictures of residents of the area, the history of the farms and other pertinent facts of interest, were perused by the ladies with much interest. It is a book of great historical value. Several games and contests were captained by Mrs. McIntyre

O.P.P. report

During the week of December 6 to Dec. 13, personnel of the Acton Detachment, Ontario Provincial Police, worked a total of 211 hours and patrolled 642 miles of town roads. charges were preferred, seven warnings were issued and three property damage accidents were investigated. Property damage was estimated to approximately $900. A charge of careless driving was laid after one of the investigations.

Liquor, gas Officers investigated nine general occurrences during the week. Included were a charge of "Impaired Driving" and

"Common Drunk". At least two people have started to celebrate Christmas early.

The stolen motor vehicle mentioned in the last report was recovered in the city of Guelph. 21 summouses

During the week a total of 21 summons were issued to motorists who left their cars on the streets overnight. Overnight parking is not allowed in the town and vehicles left overnight are hindering snow removal. So don't wait for a summons or your car to be towed away, remove it

overnight parking yourself and give the town workmen a chance to do their job. Drivers! When driving in falling snow after dark, turn off those high beams! Always use the low beam instead. The low beam on your headlights, lights the road ahead below the falling snow. High beams hit the white snow flakes and create a visionreducing effect. So, remember in falling snow at night, always use that low beam. If you are proud of your car and keep it in top shape you may have the feeling that in an emergency, you could stop on a dime. The truth is, at 60 MPH on good dry roads, a motorist can only stop at the end of a string of 5,856 dimes, stretching the length of a football
