the painted box
By Wendy Thomson

Last fall, our family decided we needed a new interest to spice up our lives a bit. After much discussion, we made up our minds what to do. One evening a week, we take our rings off, clip our fingernails, grab satchels and bundles and away we go.
Gord has always been interested in judo, and after enrolling the three youngsters in a judo class, staying to watch, and learning that there was an adult class too, he added his name and became a judoka, a student.

Threw instructor
The classes are fascinating. The first night, six-year-old David threw the instructor over his shoulder (with much cooperation, of course). It made him so proud that he went to school the next day and threw a 12-year-old who was bothering him. Unfortunately, his prowess faded along with the first glow of success.

Crashing bodies
And where am I in all this? Sitting on the sidelines watching. I'm the type of person who is in agony for 15 minutes after bumping into something, and after watching the bodies come crashing down on the mats, figure there's no point in leaving myself open to something like that.
That doesn't save me, though. The family often wants somebody innocent to try a hold or throw on, and I'm the only one available. I've got pounced on and grabbed from all angles, and found quite early that there's no point in trying to get away. This makes Gord quite aggrieved.
"You're SUPPOSED to struggle" and I just lie there and agree with him. The nights I stay home, I've got used to being woken up at 11 o'clock at night by a body flying in the door, and a voice whispering in my ear "Wait till you see the Hold-down we learned tonight!!" I can wait.

Me next
Sometimes I'm not sure that the instinctive reactions being drummed into the kids are in the best interest. I went to swat Jim on the rear one day, and was quite startled when he spun around and went into a crouch, all ready to send me into the fireplace. On second thoughts, maybe it would be better if I enrolled next year.

With my clipped nails, ringless fingers, and satchel packed with rolling pin, toothbrush, orange peeler, earrings, and other assorted paraphernalia, I went to pottery classes. Over the months, I didn't turn out anything sensational, but I had fun anyway.

Indigestion snake
The first thing I found, was that none of potting is as easy as it looks. My clay coils were never even, but looked like snakes with acute indigestion instead. And at first, no matter what I tried to make, it always looked like a glorified chamber pot.
Once I spent ages trying to smooth out a slab with my rolling pin, but lumps kept showing. Finally I realized that they were caused by the dents in my rolling pin, the result of using it as a hammer one day.
In spite of my choosing my night class so carefully, I still wound up with aches and pains. A couple of hours with the potter's wheel left me aching for days. Another night it was a little difficult to explain to Gord how it was that the instructor hit me and split my lip.
"Well, it was like this . . ."
