Much work, no help closing Acton plant?

Councillor Norm Elliott wants Acton council to contact the accuracy bureau of the largest Toronto daily newspaper following a story which suggested that the Acton branch plant of Adams Knitting Ltd. is closing Friday because of inability to hire help.

In Monday's Toronto Star, Lloyd Fuller, president of the company, is reported to have said the plant in Acton planned to hire 65 workers but it never -employed more than 16.

"We never got it off the ground," he is reported to have said. "Eligibility rules for unemployment benefits were changed in January and gradually became known over the next three months. The original concept of benefits was wonderful for someone thrown out of work. I'm not against that. But for someone to just walk off voluntarily and get benefits-it's inconceivable."

He also said 45 of his workers in Toronto walked out and are on unemployment and he has $360,000 worth of business on the books he can't get

Councillor Elliott challenged the Star story, asserting that he "had it on good authority the company had over 65 applications for jobs when it opened and many employees of the now defunct Mason Knit company who applied for jobs were never hired."

"I'm concerned," he told council Tuesday night. The story could be picked up by other industries interested in locating here and will give the impression there is a shortage of labor here when there isn't, Elliott

"I'd like to see it investigated and retracted.

Mayor Les Duby agreed the story sounded like something was wrong. He recalled another company in the same line of work had over 85 applications for jobs. Tire company, however, decided against locating in Acton when it was discovered there was no financial assistance available from the government development branch.

The mayor has often suggested one of Acton's crying needs is for light manufacturing suitable for women.

The item in Monday's Toronto Star was part of a larger article which claimed there is a glut of jobs in the needle trades. Although business has never been better businessmen are frustrated by the inability to get the labor to turn out the goods.

One estimate is that there are 8,000 jobs begging in the industry across Canada for sewing machine operators, 1,500 of them in the Metro area. Businessmen blame the newly generous unemployment benefits for the problem

The Free Press tried to contact Adams president Lloyd Fuller for his comments but he was unavailable.

Ajax strike

not settled

No immediate settlement appears likely in the strike against Ajax Engineers by 20 employees, members of Local 7515 United Steelworkers.

Workers walked off the job Friday, September 22, after union membership voted to reject a 7 per cent wage increase offer made by the company.

Local 7515 president Doug Vickery said a meeting between company and union negotiators was held last Wednesday, but it lasted only a short while as neither side could agree.

He said two trucks from a nonunionized firm crossed picket lines Thursday and removed two large towers that are munufactured at the plant. He said picketters made no attempt to stop the trucks.

Vickery said there is no sign of a meeting between union and management in the near future.

Switch lights missing at CNR

Four switch oil lamps were reported missing from the C.N.R. tracks on Eastern Ave. over the weekend. The CNR police from Kitchener reported the apparent theft to Acton OPP. The red and green globes are of a type being replaced by plastic, and would be considered collector's items.

It appears that the globes were taken off their bases by wrench.

Miss Erin Fair

The next person to sell you Erin, who are well-known in groceries may just be ... Miss Erin Acton through the IGA store.

Blond Lydia Dudnik was chosen Saturday at Erin to represent the fair during the year and at the C.N.E. competition next year for Miss Ontario Fair.

She's well known in the locality since she helps her parents, Dymitry and Rima Dudnik, at their general store in Ospringe.

Other contenders First runner up in the contest was Karen Manes, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Manes of and Patty Perrin of Erin. They were selected on the basis of interview, impromptu speeches and parading on stage in the Erin arena.

When the Dudnik family lived at Moffat, Lydia attended Milton high school for four years. She went to Erin high school before starting the U. of G. She has a brother Sandy, who's in grade 8 at Ospringe school and a sister Natalie who is now working in Lydia was "completely taken aback" and didn't know what to say; she admits that's pretty unusual!

She is the second Miss Erin Fair to be chosen.

The three Halton candidates in the federal election have agreed to appear and will be given 10 minutes each to speak on their own platform. A question and answer period will follow.

Acton Chamber of Commerce officials have contacted Acton Citizens' Band and it has been agreed the band will lead a parade through town prior to the program at the school. It will be up to the candidates and their supporters to arrange the form of their own parade entry.

Written as well as oral questions will be accepted from the floor at the Robert Little School to encourage everyone to participate and get into the spirit of the election. There is no charge for the 8 p.m. meeting. The Chamber of Commerce is supplying light refreshments afterwards, hoping the three candidates will stick around and socialize with those in attendance.

Present Halton incumbent Rud Whiting will represent the Liberals, Terry O'Connor the Progressive Conservatives and Mrs. Carolyn Holstein will be carrying the New Democratic Party banner in the parade as well as on the platform.

MISS ERIN FAIR is Lydia Dudnik, left, and one of her runners-up is Evelyn Eastlen, right. The two had a chilly ride at Erin fair Monday.

Lydia lives at Ospringe where her parents operate the general store.
