Always a gentleman Henry Deveau retires as office manager

The Free Press' favorite autograph giver, Henry Deveau, officially retired Saturday night with a noisy send-off at the Music Centre. Henry was the one who signed the cheques every week and the signature was every bit as popular as a movie star's, around here, anyway.

And from the film world is where Henry came. He left his management of the Roxy Theatre to become advertising manager and later office manager. He has been with the company for 17 years, and as far as anyone can remember, his is the first regular retirement. Other people have come and gone for a variety of reasons, but Henry, with a precision and neatness that were typical, completed his years of work on schedule and retires in good health to enjoy the remainder of his years with his charming wife Anne.

Staffs of both the Milton and Acton offices gathered at the Music Centre to bid good-bye to Henry. (His job has been taken over by Don MacDonald.)

looking forward to a full two months in Africa visiting daughter Nancy Couard; Hill Elliott has closed out the stationery store which he ran after his own actual retirement from business.

Presentations were made by Jim and Dave Dills. On behalf of the staff Hartley Colfs read a citation to Henry and presented a momentous gift - a reproduction of a front page on a plaque, and his picture encircled with 17 silver dollars, one for each year with the company. Bob MacArthur presented a bouquet to Anne Deveau and Kit Dowling assisted.

Call out reserves

Watson's restaurant called out all the family and staff to cater for the reception, buffet dinner and midnight lunch for over 100 and The Marx played for dancing. (They really hope we will spell their name right this time.)

A group photograph taken by one of our talented staff photographers turned out to be one of the worst pictures ever taken in his famous career as a newspaperman.

Henry is always a gentleman, with a Gallic flair and he was one of the very few in the plant who never got inky. Always affable and debonair, he was only fazed three times - twice when his fluorescent light smashed down on his desk, and the day an unsuspected ulcer burst while he worked at his books. No one could have moaned more discreetly. No kidding—we'll really miss him.
