How to be politician course at Sheridan

Sheridan College is again offering a course on how to campaign for local and regional elections. Course instructor and well-known author, Desmond Morton, a history professor at the University of Toronto, says that in the new regional set-up, candidates without wealthy backing are likely to be shut out of elections if they don't manage to develop a real organization. Aim of the course, according to Morton, is to share the kind of knowledge professional politicians usually keep to themselves.

The course will run for three weeks every Tuesday and Thursday evening starting April 24.
