THE WEALTHY IMMIGRANT

The early American folklore that the streets of the New World were paved with gold has turned out to be true for many immigrants who moved to this continent from Europe.

Immigrants over the last 60 years were for the most part impoverished workers and farmers who faced a hopeless future in the country of their birth where land and the real estate wealth of the country was owned by a few wealthy families.

We take the right to own one's own home for granted, but to the bulk of the Old World's poor it was and is an often impossible dream.

Is it any wonder new immigrants to our shores save large portions of their incomes to invest in real estate? Foremost is their own home, after which they often go on to purchase investment properties that eventually make them rich.

A seasoned Realtor is an expert in investment opportunities in his area. He is aware of rising values, zoning changes and pitfalls to avoid.

Most experienced Realtors have their own case histories of investment-minded citizens they have helped on the road to financial security. If you are not now, you could be one of these case histories.
