

35,000 sales

There were over 35,000 sales of houses and properties in Halton and Peel last year. Regional Assessment Commissioner Robert Beach told Milton Council at a meeting Tuesday night.

Beach appeared at council in order to keep council up to date on what was happening in the assessment field and answer questions from councillors.

He told council the 35,000 sales represented more than double the number of sales the city of Toronto had.

Beach said market value assessment had been delayed until 1977. It had been planned for 1975. In answer to a question Beach explained the market value assessment could shift part of the tax burden from industry to the property owner. He noted the scheme was being studied in order that a fair and equitable system could be arrived at.

He told the council that his department at one point had difficulty in getting all of the new homes on the tax rolls promptly but he noted that problem had been overcome.

Helping hands gets boost

Despite the fact Halton Hills council turned down a request for a grant from Halton Helping Hands, Councillor Len Cox read a letter he received from a grateful citizen.

In the letter the women said she had a stroke last year, and since then had been helped by Halton Helping Hands. She said they came every two weeks and did the floors, cleaned windows, and had done some outside painting.

The letter stated they made no charge, but she gave them a donation, and closed by urging the community to support the organization.

Councillor Cox said he had known the woman all his life. "She has spent her life helping others."

Mayor Tom Hill said Halton Helping Hands were going back to regional council to try again for a grant.

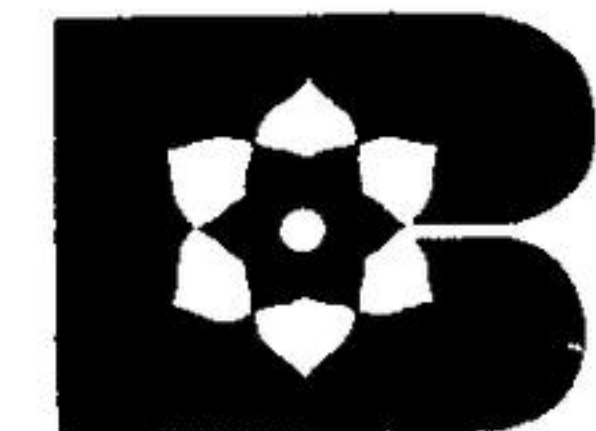

Sound system

Halton Region's Administrative Committee is considering three different bids to provide sound system in the council chambers at the rented headquarters in Burlington.

Prices from consultants range from $3,600 to $5,316. The committee agreed members should share microphones to keep costs down.

Barrett loses

Oakville Mayor Barrett lost his fight against Halton Regional Council last week when Oakville Council voted to pay $1,119.82 in interest due to late payment of that town's interim lev.
