Let's talk about horses by Jennifer Barr

With Jennice Barr There's a touch of fall in the air today, cool, crisp, glowing-the time of year equestrians love. Horses are plump and healthy from a summer on grass, lower temperatures make them lively and fun to ride, everyone feels good.

It's also time to talk about the new season's health and feeding tips. If your horses are on pasture, it's time now to think of supplementary feeding. The nutritional content of the grass is slowly diminishing from September on. The hard-to-keep horse will need grain and maybe some hay as well as his grass. The plump, chunky horse doing little work will be all right without horse scratches his legs with pasture is good.
