Many times when folks "back home" asked why we were moving to Alberta, we said something to the effect that we wanted out of the rut (however comfortable) we'd got into. Both Gord and I were rushing around constantly, enjoying much of it but having little time to sit and talk now and then. We thought the move would give us a chance to rearrange our lives a bit and try life at a slower pace. doesn't work-at least not meshed nicely. yet. For three months we relaxed and puttered, going to ing for one local paper, I had bed when we felt like it. I got to let the chance to write for up at 7.30 to see David off to school but Gord often slept till 8.30 or 9. After 16 years of getting up at 5.30, that seemed like heaven! Son J,im was unsuccessful in finding a job as an apprentice mechanic, which meant the three of us were falling over each other in this tiny house, getting bored. There's quite a bit of renovating to do, but materials are hard to come by. They're always "on order"

Finally I'd had it, pushed both Gord and Jim out the door and told them to find something to DO! Jim enrolled at Drayton Valley's high school and Gord found they needed help where he gets all the "fixings" for the house.

My turn Then it was my turn. For stereo, and swept the floor, nothing in here.

So on a whim I answered half the adds in the local pappeople, figuring something would come out of five applications for varied types of jobs. Some weren't really my cup of tea, but I thought it would be fun to try all sorts of odd jobs and see how many dimensions I could add to my

I had five acceptances! That meant I had to weed a bit. The desk clerk job in a hotel could have been interesting, but it was solid night shift. The prospect of driving 16 miles home over country roads at midnight didn't enthuse me greatly, so I let that for now.

Well,-I'll have to admit it pass. Three of the other jobs

As I'd already started writanother go. The bonus was that the one paper I helped out at was beside Gord's lumber yard, and that meant a lunch together now and then.

Last week was spent as a photographer for an Edmonton firm that takes sports pictures, the bowling leagues now, more to come later. There, I learned quite a bit about group pictures and heard much about the business end of such services.

Kindergarten Next week I start on something that could be quite fascinating. On some far-out areas there's no kindergarten, and someone is hired to visit five year olds at home once a week with games, toys and projects, staying an hour at each house.

As this was being explained weeks I'd been waking up to me by the school associaquite early. It was too dark tion, tall of us keeping one and cold outside to do any- eye on a red setter in first thing out there; and after I'd stages of labour in the corwashed the dishes, dusted the ner) I began to have selfdoubts and started pointing out how qualified the rest of the applicants were. That didn't work, and from now till er, and contacted a few other May I'm "The Special Lady" in the red truck.

By then I should have enough stashed away in my money-sock to start on a venture of my own, one I've had in mind for awhile.

Oh yes-musn't forget about the guy who showed up here who was heading off on horse through the mountains and into Sasquatch country and hinted quite strongly that he was looking for a photographer to go with him and his four black and tan hounds. Shades of the great Wagon Train! We let that one pass-

I like to jingle when I move and not from the safety pins that hold my clothes together, but from bangles I wear on my left wrist.

remember during my early high school days I never considered sewing a seam or hemming a hem. I just relied on my skilled use of safety pins. I was once reminded that if I did not start sewing and stop pinning I would soon be rattling. Well, now I rattle but now it's my bangles and not my pins.

I still think small gold pins are acceptable where you may not want to put something as permanent as a dome fastener. But check your rattles if you have themthey should be coming from your bangles!

Bangles on your wrist are an excellent fashion accessory. They add zest to sports and afternoon attire. However they are less appropriate for evening and cocktail apparel. They would go well with long casual skirts and hostess gowns. Bracelet
