Art Fever outbreak sweeps high school

Over 200 students at Acton high school were treated for Art Fever, an illness which gets into the system of arts students in the month of June.

As other students and parents walked in to the gym last Thursday evening and Friday, they found that they too were bitten by the bug.

Art Fever is unlike any known sickness to man. Germs are not spread by sneezing and coughing, but by enthusiasm, interest and talent.

Displays

Art Fever '76 is an art show put on by art students, displaying their work for the second semester. Many pupils in the first semester also had work on display.

Paintings, pottery, weaving and other crafts were all out for everyone to see. Demonstrations of pottery making, weaving and wheel were seen in the gym, while films and slides were shown in class rooms.

Music was piped into the gym, adding to the excitement while the students worked on demonstrations or sold handmade crafts. A steady stream of people went through the show on Thursday evening and Friday, according to art teacher Mrs. June Levy, with draws for prizes being made at regular intervals.

All day Friday, students from the various art periods had a sidewalk coloring contest outside the school. Chalk drawings on concrete covered the sidewalk at the entrance outside the gym and on down toward the main entrance. A few drawings made their way onto Acton Boulevard. Principal Dean Fink and Director of Education, L. M. Lavender judged the artists' works and called a tie between Susan Mellor and Dan Warren.

The visitors, according to Mrs. Levy, were impressed by the organization of the event and the way the students were able to work together. She said that many parents made comments about the pottery wheel expressing surprise of its existence. Mrs. Levy said the objective of the art show was to show the public what the school offers and the talents which are hidden within the school.

Jim Goring, another art teacher, and industrial arts students worked along with Mrs. Levy and the art students to put on Art Fever.

Vaccinations have been given, so the school has quietened down since the outbreak. However, the vaccines are not guaranteed to last until next June. When another outbreak of Art Fever is due.

WOOD SCULPTURING was displayed by grade ten student Karen Tuffin at the high school's Art Fever last Thursday and Friday. Karen helped set up the wood and shop display at the art show.

Ban movie from schools

A movie which proved to be so offensive that some students left the classroom has been banned from all Halton Schools.

Thursday Director of Education Em Lavender reported to Halton Board of Education about a controversial sexually oriented film which was shown at a Burlington High School recently.

The film, entitled Thermal Visions, was shown at the school by an unidentified Burlington resident who was just another in a long series of guest speakers from the community brought into the school over the year. The guest speaker is considered an expert in making infra-red films.

Lavender said over 40 students saw the movie and some left because they found the film "objectionable." The movie was described as showing the complete sex act and variations.

He reported the principal has talked with all students who saw the movie and also has spoken to the teachers involved.

Lavender said the school has admitted the movie was never previewed and it has been agreed it should never have been shown. In addition the teachers involved now believe they should have halted the showing when its contents became obvious.

He added the film had nothing to do with values education.
