Credit Valley Conservation Authority have decided to go for broke with the master plan for Silvercreek Conservation Area. On a recommendation from General Manager Harry Watson,

Parks and Recreation committee will advise maximum recreation plans for the 2000 acre park, even though maximum use may never be required. "We may never use all of it," stated Authority Chairman Grant Clarkson. "But the planning should be done now. We can hold back on development."

"There's a distinction between the Master Plan and phase development," agreed Dave Culham, Authority member from Mississauga.

The Silvercreek Conservation Area includes almost 2000 acres of Authority owned land and slated acquisition land in the area north east of Silvercreek between Highway 7 and Line 5 of Chingacousy, joining up with the Terra Cotta Conservation Park currently in use.

Depending on available land the conservation area may touch Sideroad 27 to the north west and cover the entire Silvercreek valley to 32nd Sideroad.

Three concepts presented Preliminary discussion of the master plan, presented by W. E. Coates and Associates, Landscape Architects of Toronto, took place at a recent CVCA Parks and Recreation Advisory Board meeting.

The plan includes three concepts at this stage. Concept One features maximum recreation use with camping facilities on 94 acres varying from primitive hiking sites to fully serviced sites. Day use areas, including historical and educational centres, will total 81 1/2 acres while some 35 miles of multi-use trails would be incorporated.

Concept Two has nearly 12 acres less for camping but includes an additional 60 acres in day use areas. The architects stress this concept emphasizes preservation of conservation land with less concentrated recreation use.

The third concept is a combination of both keeping the valley and the sensitive core area unchanged while campsites and picnic places will adorn the peripheral outline. In all concepts the closing of the 8th Line of Esquesing in the valley is recommended with the closing of the 9th Line suggested in two concepts.

Even though recreation plans vary, most of the huge area will be pure conservation park, with the valley and wildlife sanctuaries proected. The Bruce Trail winds through most of the area.

Maximum use At this stage, the Parks and Rec Advisory Board opt for a combination of all three concepts combining the maximum recommendations for all areas, feeling the CVCA doesn't have to build up to maximum use but plans are there if the need becomes apparent in future years.

General Manager Watson said, "I go for the most intense use of each in the master development plan but would suggest minimum use until needed." He felt the Authority should start with walking trails and gradually progress to other use trails phasing into primitive camping and more construction over a period of years.

Orangeville member E. Stavelly wanted to know if the Authority paid full taxes on conservation land stating the small municipalities missed out on tax revenue from conservation land versus residential land with large houses. Watson assured him the

THE SILVERCREEK VALLEY is one of the most beautiful in the area and is a major conservation site owned by the Credit Valley Conservation Authority. Master planning for the conservation park is presently underway.

Authority, assisted by the government, paid full tax and added the land was waste land because he doubted "the Niagara escarpment Commission would allow any homes in there anyway."

Clarkson pointed out conservation keeps the land going and increases potential for rural municipalities.

Owens land Two hundred acres of land recommended for acquisition is presently owned by the Peel Board of Education as a field study centre.

CVCA member Dave Culham suggested using the land co-operatively on a joint acquisition basis may be possible.

Chairman Clarkson pointed out "in the past co-operative effort has not been all that successful."

He was incensed that the consultants hadn't taken this into consideration. "We don't have to buy what the consultant says—let's ask him what he means!" he exploded.

Discussion revealed many of the consultants recommendations didn't coincide with existing use, particularly in the already operated Terra Cotta park area.

"I'm very concerned how much the consultant has talked to the people running Terra Cotta," said Clarkson.

It was agreed to meet with consultants again for further clarification.

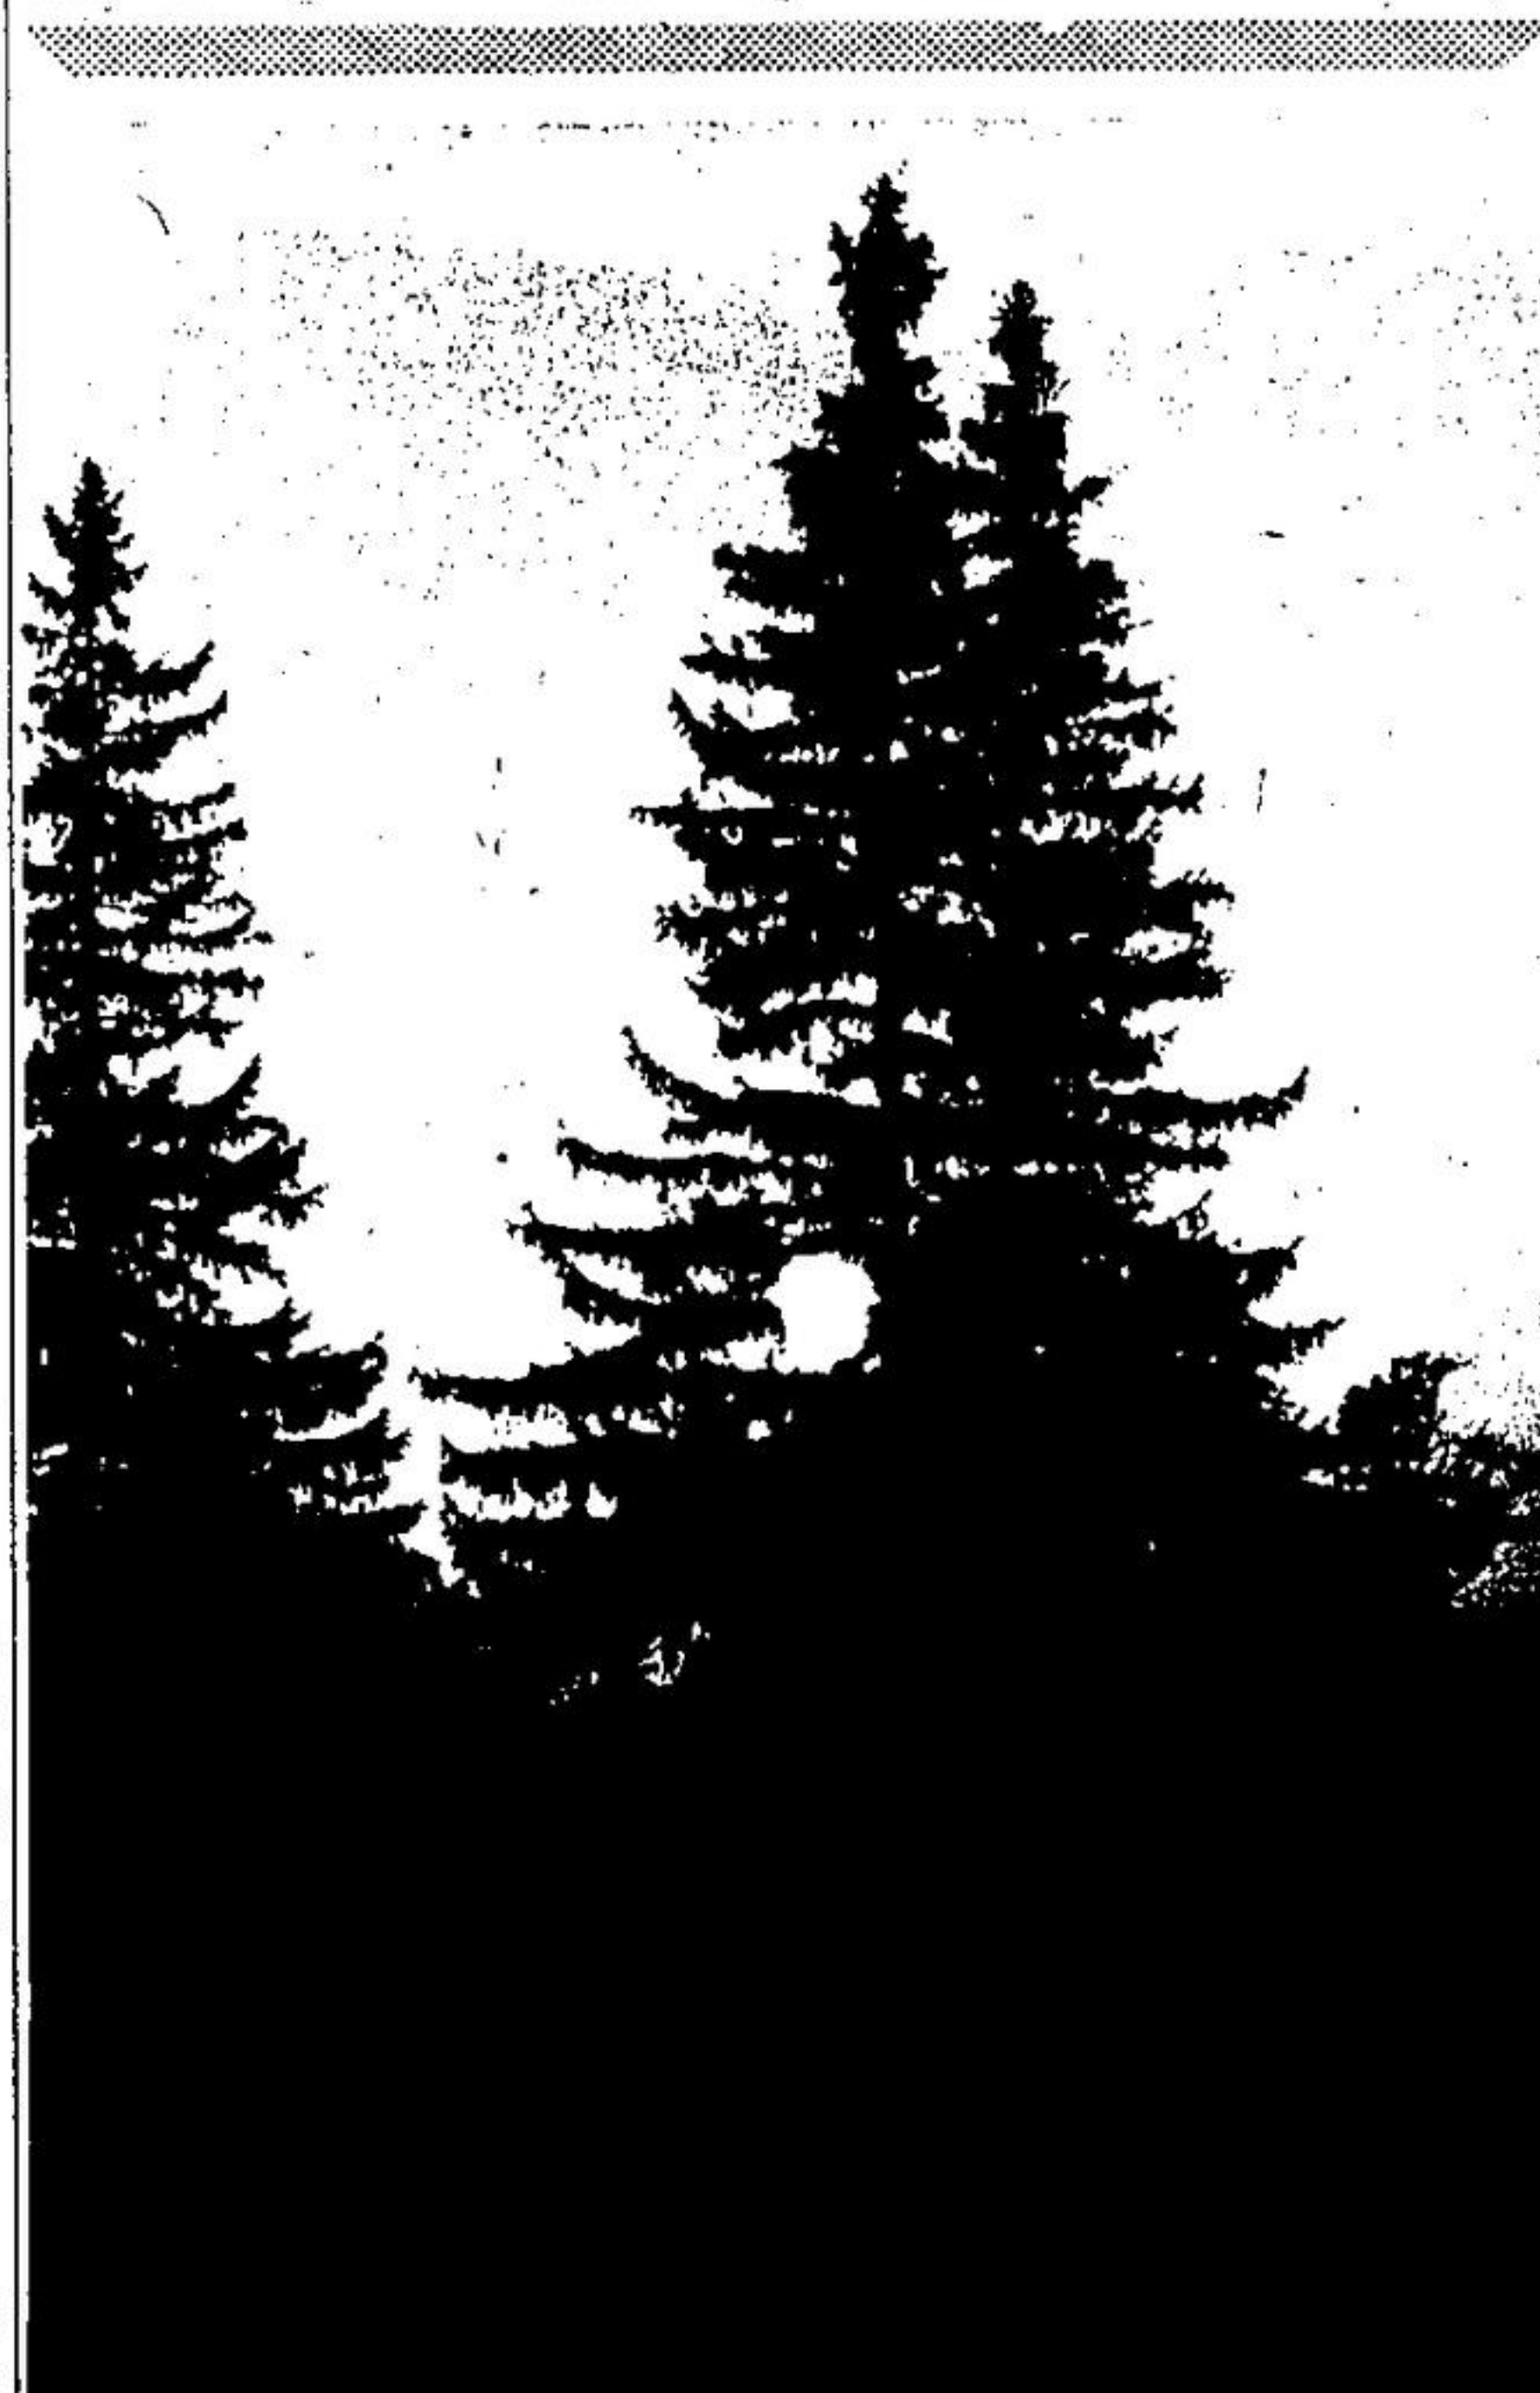

Back to staff

George Roberts, president of the Bruce Trail Association, and education officer for the CVCA, requested consideration be given to an outdoor environmental educational centre on the master plan. He suggested the Vaughn farm and surrounding areas as ideal for such use.

Acton member Gail Maltby expressed concern over lack of horse riding trails, only 3.9 miles being suggested on the original plan. She felt hiking, bicycling and horse trails would be compatible and should be of primary importance. Both recommendations were noted for further planning.

The Advisory Board recorded their concerns and sent the report back to staff for further consultations with the architect in order to create a fourth concept including all recommendations, before presenting the plan to the Authority.
