Report recommends Halton United Way

A study two years in preparation recommends that the United Way get involved in north Halton for the first time. The report of the Management Committee, working on the United Way Boundary Study, released its recommendations in a 40-page document last week.

The committee recommendation would see the Burlington United Way eventually opt out of the Burlington and Hamilton-Wentworth United Way and become part of a new organization following regional boundaries.

United Way is currently in Oakville as well but that organization has never been operational in Milton or Halton Hills and no collections have been made in the north end of the region.

According to the resolution passed by Management Committee, the Halton-Wentworth and the Halton United Ways would operate as a federated United Way.

The report doesn't dwell on what the obligations of the partners in the federation would be. That will be left up to the United Ways to work out.

The report recommends representatives from north Halton join representatives of the Burlington and Oakville United Ways to plan the transition from the present system to one united system in Halton.

Terry Baines Georgetown lawyer Terry Baines said he could see some real benefits in North Halton for groups and organizations which offer important but low profit services and find it difficult to canvass successfully.

He pointed to a trend of government to want to withdraw from its role in financing volunteer organizations. He said he expected there would be some resistance from groups who are already holding successful fund raising campaigns.

According to Mr. Baines, experience has shown that United Way organizations have to be fairly large if they are going to be successful.

He noted that the organization has to be large to minimize the impact of the administration costs.

Rural area
The largely rural nature of north Halton is one of the reasons Baines feels the organization has never been operational in the north.

While the timing of the set-up of the United Ways depends a lot on the United Ways in Burlington and Oakville, Mr. Baines is confident that it won't be in effect for at least two or three years.

Several interviews were conducted in the development of the report. During those interviews the need for public transit in the north, and from the north to the south emerged as a priority need for people in the north.

A social planning council, nursing home beds, support services for the elderly and specialized medical and psychiatric services were other areas of concern, the report says.

"Alcoholism in youth is another problem area. There are numerous activities for sport oriented youth but nothing in the way of entertainment or drop-in centres for the non-sports motivated. Acton attempted a drop-in the interior of the building was vandalized. Cedarvale Community Centre in Georgetown opened a drop-in centre in July 1976 but received little response. The explanation offered is that there were insufficient funds to provide the equipment that would attract youth."

Some reservations
In conclusion the report indicates any move to put United Way into the north will meet with some reservations and will have to be done slowly and on an educative basis.

The report said that, "In considering the development of a regional United Way it is essential that planners are sensitive to the apprehensions of the north. While Milton is not the centre of the Region if one considers the present population distribution, it is perceived by the north as the geographical hub of the Region. Yet regional government itself, hard services like police, etc., the Ministry of Community and Social Services, the V.O.N., the C.A.A., etc., all have their head offices in Burlington. Indeed, on the C.A.S. Board of eighteen there are only two representatives from north Halton.

"What is sometimes forgotten in the north, however, is the relatively small population and the difficulty in making contacts. Another source of bitterness is the lack of nursing home beds in the north.

"In all of north Halton there are only 10 beds—and these are in Acton—but when application was made to build a 90 bed complex on the Georgetown Hospital grounds the request was turned down on the basis that Halton, as a Region, had more beds per capita than was recommended, though all are located in the south. Thus north Halton residents see their chronically ill being sent out of the area and also they see separated couples unable to visit because of the lack of public transportation.

Getting bigger
"Increasing awareness on the part of the south to these problems and the growth of population for the Region (366,400 in 1966; 525,000 in 2001) are both factors which in time will help to alleviate the situation.

"Another factor which will contribute to the relief of this situation is the migration of new people into the area, particularly into Milton, from the larger urban centres. While this too has created its own problems yet these newcomers bring with them a demand for services that had been taken for granted in their original communities and a receptiveness to such concepts as United Ways.

"Discussion of the concept of a United Way elicited feelings of ambivalence. Those interviewed recognized the aggravation of multiple solicitations but expressed the belief that most people would continue to support their favorite individual charities rather than a single, impersonal organization. Also, individuals cited Cancer, Heart and the Red Cross as agencies which possibly might not welcome a United Way. There may be validity in this statement when applied to Cancer and Heart which traditionally have remained independent of United Ways. The Georgetown Red Cross however, caution and qualifications notwithstanding, is at least willing to consider, and discuss the concept," the report claims.

"Both Georgetown and Milton have a proliferation of service clubs which have worked hard for many years to support services in their communities. It was felt by some that these groups would not be threatened by a United Way and might in fact be a resource in the development of a United Way.

"Throughout north Halton there are a number of people who seriously question whether the community is ready to accept and support a United Way. On the other hand there is a hard core of individuals who perceive a United Way, not only as a good for the community, but also as a necessity in order to provide equal availability and quality of service. Their contention is that community receptivity to a United Way would depend in large part on the "packaging" and that the concept would be accepted if properly sold. It is concluded that any attempt at organizing a United Way must be made slowly and on an educative basis."
