Library takes inventory with help of grant

Lynne Simoni has been working for 12 weeks taking an inventory of books in the Acton Library, and she says "I sometimes see books in my sleep."

Scouts have big bonfire

Scout leaders had a larger than expected bonfire Friday evening, which resulted in Acton Volunteer firefighters having to extinguish the out-of-control flames at Blue Springs scout reserve.

Fire chief Mick Holmes said the blaze was caused by the rekindling of an earlier fire when the staff were burning off brush. Mr. Holmes said the men thought the fire was out, but were proven wrong.

One of the camp staff was taken to hospital by ambulance after over-exerting himself in his attempts to put out the blaze.

of a provincial student grant from the Ontario Experience '77 program, which provides funds for students to work in areas tailored to the student's interests. Lynne has a three-year Bachelor of Arts from Guelph and is planning to work in libraries when she finishes school.

Halton Hills chief librarian Betsy Cornwell came up with the idea of taking the inventory, first to determine how many books are missing and second to start records which will aid the introduction of a computerized catalogue system in the library within the next two years.

All non-fiction So far this summer Lynne has gone through all the children's non-fiction and is just about through the adult non-fiction. Although the job is mostly an inventory taking, that is not where her work stops. If she finds a book without a card she has to make one for it, and some of the older books with Library of Congress numbers have to be converted to the newer Dewey Decimal system.

Lynne said she often finds books she wants to read. "I often sit down, take a book off the shelf and look at it."

"A fair number of books have been lost," she said, but was unable to say exactly how many, because she does not know when the last inventory was taken.

To combat losses, many larger libraries, including the University of Guelph library, according to Lynne, have installed mini-alarm systems inside each of their books. A magnetic strip is taped inside each book, and if the book is not taken to the desk and checked out properly, the strip will produce a noise as the person passes through the door to go outside.

The mini-alarm system and introduction of a computerized circulation system will come as close to eliminating book thefts as is possible, Mrs. Cornwell believes.
