See plans for library

For the first time, Halton Hills library board and the public saw plans for the proposed $750,000 Cedarvale library in Georgetown. The board met at Acton library last week. John Ferguson and Betty Fisher, opponents of the library were absent. The board invited them by letter, but they let it be known before the meeting that they do not support what they termed "a promotion job." A date for the Ontario Municipal Board (OMB) hearing on the question of the library's site has yet to be fixed. The town directed its solicitor to request a hearing before the OMB. Five people joined the seven-member board for the hour-long color slide show by architect Philip Brook. Three of the audience arrived when the show was half finished. There was no room in Georgetown for the meeting, board chairman Joan Lister said. Meetings are held in the old Esqueving council chamber, but, it's been partitioned off into smaller rooms. The board also wanted to see new panelling in the Watson Room in Acton's library.
