The Warden

Since I served my Quarter Century, And I came out on parole, It's no-surprise, the Warden's eyes, Are the Guardians of my soul.

When I got an invitation, To the "Quarter Century Club" For a solid hour, I was in the shower, Even then she made me scrub.

She said I did not smell too good, Since I chased those alley cats, But she understood, what was in the blood, Came from the tannery vats.

So, she made me dress informal like, 'Cause I was out to have a spree, I was off to the "Quarter Century Club" Where everything was free.

Then she gave me quite a lecture, About the company I choose, "Don't stuff your tub, with that free grub, And keep away from BOOZE."

But when she wasn't looking, I sneaked a couple of ryes, Then I took a breath-a-lizer, With teardrops in my eyes.

When we went into the dining room, With the other hungry hoard, She said "Remember your manners, with these tanners And don't go overboard."

Then we were dined and entertained, While sitting there at ease, Some music rare, was in the air, and "Paul Brothers" did strip tease.

When the evening was over, We slipped through the Legion doors We hope next year will find us here, As guests of Our Beardmore's.
