Municipal cat licence is for the birds—Hill

Municipalities shouldn't start licencing cats the same as they do dogs because it would be a horrendous job, Halton Hills Mayor Tom Hill said this week.

Licencing of cats by municipalities is just one of 235 resolutions 1,000 delegates to the annual conference of the Association of Municipalities in Ontario will consider this week in Toronto.

A committee of municipal politicians and officials from throughout Ontario came up with the idea of licencing cats after it was first suggested by the City of Oshawa. Licencing cats would help identify those responsible for spreading some types of diseases in urban areas some Ontario councillors think. The cat licencing should be a right a municipality can exercise but not be mandatory.

Mayor Hill thought cat licencing would open a real can of worms predicting the job would be near impossible because of the large numbers of stray cats which move from one municipality to another. He wondered how a town could ever determine who owns all the cats there are around. Hill said it is one thing to licence a dog because here is usually just one in each household but many families have several

He said where there is a female mother cat and numerous kittens in a home licencing would be difficult.

Hill said he didn't know if licencing would really accomplish anything anyway.

Resolutions endorsed by the conference of provincial councillors will be sent toOttawa and Queen's Park for action if those levels agree with the municipalities.

When questioned about other resolutions before the conference Halton Hills' top politician observed many have nothing to do with the municipalities.

One idea he did support was a municipal review of school board budgets.

"Yes. 100 per cent, yes," he declared. Hill says if the town had some control over the school board budget then it could do something about keeping taxes down. He pointed out elementary and high school education tax demands make up a huge chunk of the annual tax bill and the town has no choice but to collect it. Right now the town has no control over school board budgets and it is needed. Hill said municipal control over school board spending is needed in Halton.

He also supports a resolution calling for municipal licencing of pin ball areades. Hill says tighter control is needed to ensure there is no misbehaving in such etablishments.

While the mayor does think fines for drivers leaving their keys in the ignition should be beefed up, he doesn't know why municipalities should be involved in this question. He thinks it's a matter to be examined by police commissions. It has been suggested at the conference that the fine be hiked from $10 to $100.

He is all for facilities being built for safe disposal of toxic wastes such as insecticides and polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs) but thinks such facilities should be run by the Ministry of the Environment and not municipalities.

Hill is opposed to tax dollars being spent on soft drink container recylcing depots because he doesn't believe they will do much except cost money. He suggests cans and bottles will still ze all over the sides of the road since people won't drive miles out of their way to depots. He says municipalities have no business commenting on things such as sex and violence in movies, which the conference will debate this week. These topics should be left in the hands of the province and Ottawa he says.

Eating out prompts boom in food industry

Whether you coquilles Saint-Jacques at a French cafe or a takeout basket of chicken, you are contributing to the dramatic growth of the foodservice industry in Conada. Fastpaced suburban lifestyles increasingly revolve around snacks and meals prepared outside the home. By 1985, it is predicted that about half of the meals consumed by Canadians will be eaten away from home.

This trend reflects a relatively comfortable economic situation. Professor George Bedell, director of the school of hotel and food administration at the University of Guelph, notes that Canadians have more discretionary income than ever before. In spite of gloomy economic reports, people who are working have money to spend. Chances are that they are not saving for a car or a colour television because they already have one or two of each. Their discretionary income finds its way into recreation, travel and entertainment which have helped to make eating out a big busi-

High volume sales, specialized menus and small meals or snacks characterize the fast food operations. These features keep costs down and enable the outlets to do a brisk business all day, says the University of Guelph professor.

open for subsequent governments who may decide the time is ripe to be able to accept the Charter.

The government's proposal to divide this renewal into two distinct phases, each with its own schedule, shows the length to which we feel change is needed. We have been impeded previously by discussions on certain items which fell within the purview of an amending formula or the division of powers which caused talks to collapse. Thus the government intends to change as much as possible within areas of lesser controversy within its own jurisdiction always with a priority of securing provincial agreement and co-operation.

I would greatly appreciate receiving your comments on the subject of constitutional renewal and also in preparation for our forthcoming letter on the measures recently announced by the Prime Minister.

> Yours sincerely, Dr. Frank A. Philbrook M.P.
