THIS IS CHIROPRACTIC

Each year, thousands of work hours (and dollars) are lost to Canadian industry and business through spinal defects and injuries causing low back and associated leg pain. Research indicates that many such pains are caused by mechanical defects in one or more segments of the lower or lumbar spine.

The spine provides protection for the spinal cord. In order for it to function properly, each vertebra must be in normal relationship with the adjacent vertebrae, and be adaptable within a normal range of motion.

The delicate balance and precision movement of a spinal segment may be disturbed by a slip or fall, poor posture, or heavy or awkward lifting. Such a structurally-altered spine may result in back pain, slight strain on a structurally weakened spine, or severe strain on a normal spine, which may be sufficient to actually subluxate (misalign) the vertebrae, resulting in nerve irritation.
