

Laundry appliances . . .

Useful features on many new dryers include a buzzer which sounds at the end of the drying cycle to remind you to remove the clothes. Permanent press articles should always be removed the minute tumbling ceases to retain their fresh appearance.

Taking this a step further is another special extra care cycle that provides up to 50 minutes of no-heat tumbling for permanent press clothes if they can't be removed promptly at the end of their drying cycle. The signal sounds at five minute intervals to remind you that the clothes are ready for your attention. With this cycle you can complete other tasks before "answering" the dryer.

Another feature on many dryers is a rack which hooks onto the door and holds small articles stationary. It is recommended for drying sneakers and belts that thump and bang around if tumbled, and any other items which need drying but cannot tolerate tumbling.

White is still the basic color for laundry appliances, but a range of colors—Almond, Harvest Wheat, Avocado—is available and Almond is fast becoming popular as laundry rooms are being "elevated" to first floor prominence, often schemed with kitchen appliances and decor.

Once you've made your decision, choose a reliable dealer, compare prices, know exactly what the price includes, and understand the warranty.

Laundry appliances can have a life cycle of approximately ten to twelve years, so you can see they get tremendous usage. There's usually a year's warranty on parts and labor and generally five years on the transmission system.

When you've purchased a washer and dryer you'll find very comprehensive use and care booklets included. It is important to read these thoroughly and follow the step-by-step instructions. These booklets usually include fabric labelling information in case you are not too familiar with the symbols that are mandatory on all types of clothing today.

Farming . . .

Board of Governors have been students. Then, there are those who seek to be self-sufficient on communes or organic-type farms, although they are vastly outnumbered by the pin-striped businessman.

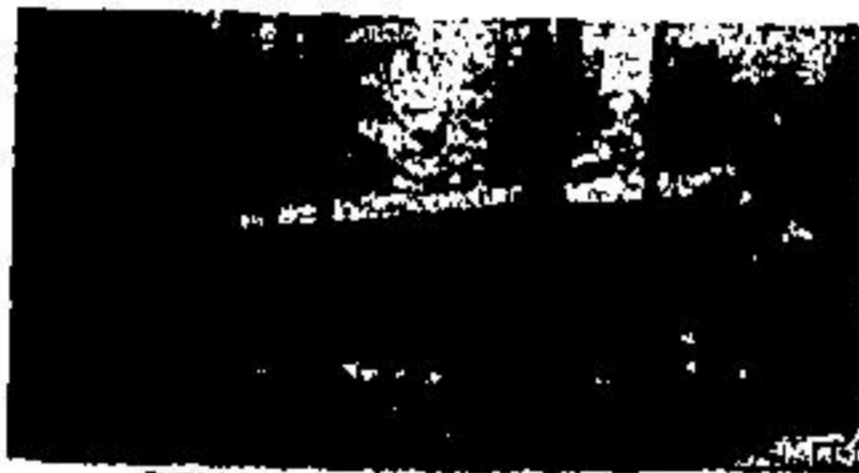

The Applied Agriculture program began in 1972 in Toronto and Guelph with 180 students enrolled in three classes. Since then the program has been extended to Ottawa, London and Hamilton with registration reaching over 700 per semester.

Most students consider farming because they have already been successful in business, industry or a profession. They seem aware that they are embarking on a whole new lifestyle. Therefore, most are satisfied to start with the introductory course which exposes participants to 10 different subjects.

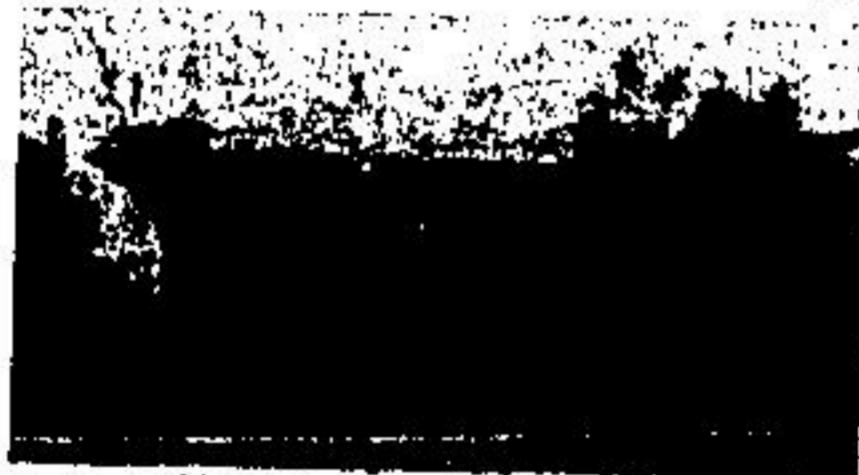

With only two hours devoted to each topic, the students are given an overview only, but a sufficient introduction to overcome erroneous or preconceived ideas about agriculture.
