Report from Queen's Park

by JULIAN HEDD M.P.P. (Halton-Hurlington)

Under a bill introduced by the Government, land-owning privileges will be extended to all religious groups. Currently, such privileges are only available to Christian and Jewish organizations, who may own property without having to record a new deed of transfer every time there is a change in trustees.

The new law extends the same benefits to any "association of persons that is charitable... organized for the conduct of religious worship, services or rites, and that is permanently established both as to the continuity of its existence and as to its religious beliefs, rituals and practices." Specifically listed are Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Islamic, Jewish, Bahai, Longhouse Indian, Sikh, Unitarian and Zoroastrian groups.

The Government also introduced legislation to make industry responsible for the clean-up of all spills involving toxic substances. It includes a provision that if industry does not clean up a spill rapidly enough, the Environment Ministry will move in, do the job, and bill the companies responsible.

The Bill, described by the Minister "as unequalled in Canada", is designed "to impose clear responsibility for cleanup and to enable my Ministry to take immediate control of the situation if required." In an interview, he stated that the Government has "no clear authority to go in and clean up a spill. Now, we'll be able to go in and clean it up right away. That will solve a lot of problems."

Liberal Environment Critic Murray Gaunt called the bill "a substantial step forward. It's something we've been advocating and pressing for for a long time." This legislation was prompted by a number of spills involving toxic industrial contaminants in recent years in which immediate cleanup procedures were impeded because of inadequate provisions in the Environmental Protection Act.

For example, there was a major spill near Dowling, located some 30 miles northwest of Sudbury in November 1973. About 1,000 gallons of transformer oil containing toxic polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs) were spilled when a CP rail freight train derailed and split open two electrical transformers.

The Environment Ministry was severely criticized for allowing this spill to deteriorate. A tribunal of the Environmental Appeal Board ruled that "it is clear that by delaying initial cleanup instructions until June 1976, the Ministry had allowed the situation to deteriorate from serious to catastrophic."

Accidents reported to the Ministry of the Environment involve a total of some 1.24 million gallons of petroleum products, non-petroleum oils, toxic chemicals and other hazardous materials which require immediate action. A further 8 million gallons of non-hazardous liquids are involved.

Buy into Synecrude In April 1976, Ontario bought into the giant Synecrude development, through the Ontario Energy Corporation, and its investment now is about $106-million. The Government will make some $35 million in profit when it sells its 5 per cent share in the Alberta oil sands development to a private company, according to the Minister of Energy. PanCanadian Petroleum Ltd., a Canadian-owned company based in Calgary, has agreed to buy Ontario's share by the 29th December for $160-million.

The Minister indicated he was pleased with the profit being made on Synecrude, and believed that the money can be used for other projects at a time when Government revenues have been disappointing. For the past number of years the Government has been anxious to be seen as favoring private interests over more public involvement in industry, and the sale of its share of the Synecrude project to a private Canadian-owned company furthers that policy.

The Province bought into the project when it was in danger of failing due to the withdrawal of Atlantic Richfield Canada Ltd., a major private investor. At that time, total cost estimates had risen to $2 billion from an original $1.2 billion.

Last summer a former Minister of Energy had said, in an interview, that when he felt optimistic he thought the province's investment could be worth up to $140 million.

The last days of the session were quite hectic. A number of ministerial statements were made, and the House passed Bill 70, providing for comprehensive health and safety coverage of most workers in the Province.

Summing up the budget debate for his party, Ian Deans (NDP Wentworth) gave his last speech as a member. He plans to resign his seat soon, and will rejoin the Hamilton Fire Department, where he had worked prior to his first election to the Legislature in 1967.

The appointment of Mr. Justice Donald Morand of the Ontario Supreme Court as Provincial Ombudsman was endorsed by all parties in the Legislature. The motion making the appointment was introduced by the Attorney-General and seconded by Liberal Leader Stuart Smith. It passed easily, with little debate.

Dr. Smith and the Leader of the NDP paid tribute to Judge Morand as a respected jurist, and said they were looking forward to working with him in his new position.

The only thing that didn't ring true, somehow, were the window

Shop students of Doug Hines, at McKenzie-Smith middle school pooled their resources and made 29 wooden toys all to be donated to Children's Hospital in Ottawa, specially for children with cancer. Involved in the project were left to right, Dwayne McCoy, Darryl Vicary, Kelly Bannon, Paul South, Bart Soder and Greg White. Mr. Hines is in the background.

October 22: tomorrow, I end my holidays and go back to work. And tonight, for the first time in weeks, I've pulled the typewriter out and tried to discipline myself enough to write a column.

It isn't easy, for writing played a very small part in our vacation schedules, as we were traveling the whole two weeks.

And once we were home at Buck Creek again, I filled my days with nothing more exciting than housework. For the first time in many, many years, I put all thoughts (well, most of them) of a column out of my head and just puttered around the house.

Now that the time has come to arrange a few wild thoughts into something entertaining, I find I'm out of practice. A column about our trip to the coast is more than I can manage tonight.

Instead, I'll ease myself back into the working world by telling of an incident that happened before we left.

I was walking through the town of Drayton Valley one day last month, when a large picture hanging in a furniture store window caught my eye. It was a print of an old stone house, such as there is around Acton, and it made me feel quite nostalgic.

The only thing that didn't ring true, somehow, were the window boxes full of geraniums or some such flowers. It was that which decided me against entertaining more thoughts of buying it and trying to find a place to hang it.

But on the other hand, I returned to the window three times before making up my mind once and for all to leave the print where it hung.

A few weeks later, my mother, Frances Weyman, (formerly of Rockwood) flew from Ontario to mind this house while Gord and I took off. And when she arrived, it was (as usual) with luggage almost bursting at the seams with odds and ends she knows we need or thinks we might like.

After spending the better part of an hour digging out all the goodies, (and bemoaning the buckwheat honey she'd forgotten) Mom reached into the bottom of the biggest suitcase and brought out a rolled-up paper. You guessed it, of course. It was not only the same picture, but one signed with personal Christmas greetings by Jack Reid, the artist.

The house was indeed one not too far from Acton, the window boxes were added from Reid's imagination, and the picture was a gift to Mom after the Reids bought the family house in Rockwood in '76 (after we had left Ontario).

My mother had not intended to bring the picture west, but did so on a whim.

And when did the whim enter her mind? By careful mental backtracking, we found it was the same day I spotted the other copy in the store window and regretfully turned away.

M.Z.B. students entertain at A.R.C.

Grades three and four students of Penny Carlos at M.Z. Bennett school entertained at A.R.C. Industries in Hornby during the Christmas season.

The youngsters took gifts and staged a Christmas concert and sing song. Ms. Carlos said she had done the same trick each Christmas for several years with her classes at Fairview school in Louisville. This being her first year teaching at M.Z. Bennett, she has hopefully started a new tradition.
