MICHAEL DOUGLAS, Jack Lemmon and Jane Fonda star in the contemporary thriller The China Syndrome.

LIFE IMITATING ART

And I thought Hardcore was timely. The Harrisburg, Pennsylvania incident has added urgency to the message in The China Syndrome, but the real situation did not give The China Syndrome its excitement—it is a thriller in its own right.

The China Syndrome baits your intellect with an amusing behind-the-scenes view of television and a consuming media versus military confrontation. This movie holds the notion of entertainment supreme, never lectures to illustrate its objectives.

Jane Fonda as Kimberly Wells the 'soft' television news reporter, is probably in her best performance to date. It serves Fonda's best interests that Kimberly Wells is an intelligent woman with convictions.

Jack Lemmon is successful exemplifying individual bravery as nuclear plant employee Jack Godell, while Michael Douglas as the cameraman earns our sympathetic response from the outset.

The China Syndrome is directed by James Bridges. This is the same James Bridges that wrote and directed The Paper Chase. The man has improved.

Incidentally, the term "The China Syndrome" isn't a foreign policy. In nuclear jargon it is a term used to describe the most terrible of all catastrophes—when the exposed nuclear core heats beyond tolerance, ruptures containment and melts right through the bottom of the nuclear plant 'all the way to China'.

The China Syndrome is also one of the best movies I've viewed this year.
